Thinking Out Loud . . . .

As a product of Catholic Schools, without a doubt, I am highly partial toward them. Eight years in grammar school with the Presentation Sisters and the Sisters of Charity were followed by four more years with the De La Salle Christian Brothers.

My four years of college were spent being taught by Benedictine monks and nuns. In the seminary, the Sulpician Fathers were in charge. My second Master's Degree was the result of the Sisters of St. Joseph; my third was thanks to St. Bernard's Institute, and my fourth, thanks to nearby Seton Hall University. All those years were spent in Catholic educational institutions, so that when it was time to earn a doctorate at a non-Catholic institution, I was ready for the task.

There was order, a sense of purpose, and challenge in each of the schools I attended. Many of the teachers regularly went far beyond the contract they signed. The teachers wanted us to achieve, encouraged us to study, and recognized that a good education could open doors in the future and present opportunities to us which our parents were denied.

As I look back at my elementary school, the classes were over- crowded. We did not have air conditioned classrooms, and the lunch room was also the gym. The salaries for the non-religious teachers were poor, and the Sisters' salaries were almost non-existent. Yet, we made it!

There was a time when I thought we made it in spite of what we didn't have; now, I believe we made it because we didn't have everything.

We learned to share. We learned discipline. We learned consequences for what we did or should have done. We learned that Sister was the teacher. She was in charge of our classroom. While parental interest was welcomed, parental interference had no place in our educational process.

Above all, we were taught that God loves us, that we were created out of love, and that God's love calls us to treat each other in a certain manner which gives dignity to everyone, and calls us to respect and honor people, regardless of whom they might be.

The Sacraments we learned about were Jesus' gifts to the Church, and they were given to us to help us on our journey through life. Mass was the Church's prayer to thank God for all He has done for us, a time we could open our hearts to the One who saved us, and thank Him for our salvation. We understood that those who sat next to us, and behind and in front of us, were likewise on this journey we call life, and they were asking for the same things for which we were praying.

While we are grateful to have a parochial school here in our parish, the closing of so many Catholic schools is tragic. That so many of our poor children do not have a Catholic school within their reach is a scandal. There is no substitute for a good Catholic education, and I worry about the future of the Church without them.

In the October 16, 2018 edition of The Beacon, a letter to the editor caught my eye. It reads:

In Praise of Catholic Schools

To the Editor:

Last June I retired from the New Jersey public schools system where I had worked as a principal and superintendent for 25 years. I have had a lifelong calling to be a principal of a Catholic elementary school, and I was fortunate to obtain that position for the current academic year.

This past week my school held a faculty retreat. We traveled to a meeting room away from the school, and the parish priest directing the event had us take turns (we each drew names from a hat) speaking about the positive points of one of the other staff members present. One can imagine the effectiveness of this. Each one of us in turn was appreciated and affirmed by the whole, and it was easy to feel the love and the support in the room. There was a lot of laughter and smiles, a few tears, and a great deal of blood pumping through the capillaries of our faces, warming them, brightening them. It was not difficult to understand how on the following school day each one of us would recommit ourselves to giving our best to the children.

There was no fancy video streamed into the event. No high-priced guru was flown in from the Midwest. Nobody asked for extra pay when the workshop ran overtime. But when I was pulling out of the parking lot following the event, I saw in my rearview mirror our 2nd grade teacher patting our kindergarten teacher on the back, and they both had a renewed sense of mission on those same brightened faces. It seemed to say, "Let's go!"

There have been a lot of bad things said about the Catholic Church lately. And it breaks my heart to see so many empty pews at Mass on Sunday mornings. My voice may be a small one, but I will use it to tell of the power and selflessness that continues to exist in that corner Catholic school that you might drive by on your way to work.

As I get older, I think that there is more and more to be said for instructing children the way Catholic schools have always done so: in quiet and orderly classrooms teach them their letters, words, and number facts in a straight forward manner, and then, over the years, steadily build upon that base with increasingly challenging lessons. Nothing slick, few bells and whistles, just tried and true methods of preparing pupils to compete in higher education and the world beyond. And while this pedagogical growth is occurring, it is not such a bad thing for the students to look to heaven each day to thank their God.

When I was working in the public schools, people used to laugh and say one could never become rich working in a Catholic school. And I would laugh along with them. But now I am not so sure.

Patrick Martin
Wayne, NJ

As I look at society today, I see how much things have changed since I was a student. There is nothing in my heart but gratitude for those who taught my classmates and me. There is something to be said for gratitude and something to be said for the way things were.

Father Patrick

ACADEMY OF ST. JAMES OF THE MARCHES
SCHOOL NEWS / WEEKEND OF OCTOBER 27 / 28 , 2018

Wow, we've been in school for 2 months, and the third graders have been working hard learning new things every day. In math, we have worked on place value, rounding, and addition. We also discussed money which tied in to our reading of two different stories, I've Made a Million, and My Rows and Piles of Coins. The third grade has completed their first chapter in social studies which compared many different communities. In science, we are discussing weather, and the students made a cloud poster where they illustrated the different types of clouds.

We met with our Grandfriends for the first time, and the students really enjoyed it. They couldn't stop talking about the meet and greet. On Wednesday, October 17th, the third graders met with their Grandfriends once again, and had a wonderful time. The students look forward to seeing them each month.

On Tuesday, October 23rd, the students were able to participate in an Activity day where they painted a pumpkin trinket box, and a fall leaf. They had a fun time painting, and the crafts came out beautifully.

Halloween Happening was on Friday October 26th, and as expected, everyone had an amazing time!! The children looked fabulous in all of their costumes, and they really had a blast playing all of the games, and dancing to the terrific music.

Please say an extra prayer that we have beautiful weather on Halloween as the students normally parade around the outside of the school showing off their costumes. Come out and see the children!
