Planned Parenthood Skimps on Prenatal Care

Scalding new charges from a pro-life investigative group say that, despite Planned Parenthood's claims to be a premier women's health care provider, the organization generally does not offer prenatal care, according to a January 24 Catholic News Agency article by Matt Hadro.

"Planned Parenthood says it's a champion of women's health care, yet prenatal care, which is an essential service for expectant mothers, is virtually nonexistent," said Lila Rose, president and founder of the group Live Action.

The group released a video on January 24 that it says will be the first in an "Abortion Corporation" series of reports investigating Planned Parenthood.

The video features audio of clinic workers allegedly telling Live Action representatives posing as potential clients that, contrary to advertisement, the clinics do not provide prenatal care.

"No, we don't do prenatal services. I mean it's called 'Planned Parenthood,' I know it's kind of deceiving," one clinic worker at a Merrillville, Ind., clinic allegedly told Live Action.

"No, see, we don't see pregnant women as a way of giving prenatal care. We see pregnant women, um, you know, if they are considering other options," a Santa Fe, N.M., clinic worker allegedly told the group.

The report was conducted through phone calls, undercover visits to clinics, and investigations from the Live Action team. Inquiries were made of 97 clinics at 41 Planned Parenthood affiliates around the country. Only five of them said they offered prenatal care.

"We found that at all these facilities prenatal care is virtually nonexistent for mothers, " Rose stated.

Planned Parenthood is the nation's largest abortion organization, performing around 330,000 abortions annually. The group also offers contraceptives and abortifacients to clients, and on a much smaller scale, performs other services like cancer screenings and pap smears.

Despite the group's claims, Planned Parenthood does not primarily offer "women's health care," but is rather a lobby for abortion on demand, opposing even partial-birth abortion bans, Rose charged.

Cecile Richards, president of Planned Parenthood, said in 2011 that "prenatal care" was part of "the kinds of services that folks depend on Planned Parenthood for."

And Richards has stopped touting the organization's record on prenatal services in her interview on why Planned Parenthood should continue receiving federal funding.

The Politics of the English Language

By Ben J. Reinhard, Ph.D

In George Orwell's dystopian novel 1984, in which Ingsoc, the English socialist dictatorship, holds absolute control over every aspect of life, including speech, one of Big Brother's most important means for maintaining its control is the debasement of the English language through the creation of "Newspeak" - effected through the elimination of some dangerous words, the weakening of others, and the creation of a flat, inflexible vocabulary. The reason for this linguistic mutilation is complicated but critically important. When a word loses its meaning, or vanishes altogether, the concept it represents vanishes too. With sufficient linguistic debasement, as Orwell explains, "a heretical thought—that is, a thought diverging from the principles of Ingsoc—should be literally unthinkable." So, for instance, the word free was redefined in Newspeak to mean merely lacking an undesirable trait, as in "This field is free from weeds." The older meaning—political or economic freedom—is gone, and as a result, the statement I am a free man is meaningless, and therefore incapable of threatening the totalitarian dictatorship.

Turning from theory to practice, it is not difficult to see Orwell's principles played out on the national stage today. Words like freedom, choice, and love—and, in some uses, even man and woman—have lost their meaning or collapsed under the weight of many conflicting meanings. Newspeak is alive and well. Orwell's fictional Ministry of Love was founded on self-contradictory slogans: "WAR IS PEACE; FREEDOM IS SLAVERY; IGNORANCE IS STRENGTH." The modern university is not far behind: in most cases a commitment to diversity demands increasing ideological conformity; tolerance seems to imply instead a rigidly narrow intolerance.

The use of political language to confuse, deceive, and whitewash—to "defend the indefensible," in Orwell's terms—is, however, most obvious in the abortion debates. In language as in life, baby is the first victim: the word is uncomfortably concrete, real, and human. No one would kill a baby—and thus fetus and pregnancy become the preferred terms. In many instances, defenders of abortion avoid using the word abortion at all. The new watchword is health—as in "critical health services" or "reproductive health care" or "personal health decisions."
