Reflection of the Week by Fr. Leo Ahanotu

Reflecting on today's readings two things kept coming to my mind. I kept asking myself, how do I use the gifts God has bestowed on me for the good of humanity, and how obedient am I? St. Paul reminds us in the second reading that the Lord has blessed each of us with specific gifts for the good of humanity. In the gospel, Christ teaches us through an act of love that our God-given gifts should be used to relieve the stress of others so that humanity would be stress-free and people would experience caring from others. He used His miraculous gifts to take care of what was stressing out the people at the wedding in Cana. In both the second reading and the gospel, we are challenged to use our gifts to make the lives of others better. The gospel also calls into mind the importance of obedience. Christ obeyed His mother and did what His mother asked him to do. How obedient are we to God? How compliant are we to our parents and guardians and other people we should listen to? How respectful are we to the reasonable rules and regulations of the church and our country? Fr. Leo
