Greetings in the name of the Lord:

Last week in the pastor's column, I wrote about Father Pancras Ekensenkore of the diocese of Gikongoro in Rwanda, Africa. He was to arrive this past week. Due to a student visa rule, his flight out of Rwanda was delayed by a week. We now anticipate his arrival this week. Please pray for safe travel for Father Pancras.

Yours in Christ:

Fr. Haft

BREAKING OPEN THE WORD with Kathy O'Connor
SIXTHTEENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Reading I: Jeremiah 23:1-6: This passage from the prophet Jeremiah comes from the part of the book containing the collection of the prophet's oracles on Israel and Judah over the course of his long career. The chapters preceding this passage announced the exile to come on account of the kings' failure to keep the Covenant. Now, Jeremiah, looking to the future, uses the image of shepherds to proclaim a new era, in which God Himself will be the shepherd/ruler of his people (verses 1-4). God will raise up a new king who will govern justly, and the new situation that will develop after the exile will be more glorious than that of the period after the exodus from Egypt. The promise of a new king is the key to understanding Jeremiah's thought. The righteous branch, meaning the future king, will eventually become a technical term for the Messiah. Jeremiah wants to show that the future Messiah will be David's legal, legitimate descendant: the Lord guarantees this by calling him a "righteous", that is "legitimate", branch. Jeremiah is the last prophet, in order of time, to proclaim a Messiah King, an intermediary between God and His people. At the same time, he is also promising direct intervention by God. St. Pope John Paul II referred to this oracle to stress that the new people of God, the Church, will always have pastors to guide it.

Responsorial Psalm: Psalm 23:1-3, 3-4, 5-6 (1): Psalm 23 is a psalm of David and proclaims that the Lord is his shepherd. The theme of a shepherd to guide God's people we saw in Jeremiah continues in our psalm. The psalm is built around two metaphors: the Lord as shepherd and the Lord as host (verses 5-6). What makes this psalm special is the very personal note. In verse 1, the actions of a shepherd are described, while at the same time describing God's relationship with someone who seeks righteousness and holiness. The sense of security that the Lord gives, even in the midst of affliction, allows the speaker to address Him directly (v 4) and proclaim the protection that God gives ("thy rod") and God's authority ("thy staff"). After acknowledging the Lord's protection, the psalm then thanks Him for His benefits. The psalmist goes on to tell God that he is confident he will go on enjoying the benefits of the Covenant (goodness and mercy) and will continue to visit the temple for a long time to come. One of the most beautiful prayers in the Psalter, this psalm takes on its full meaning after Jesus says, "I am the good shepherd."

Reading II: Ephesians 2:13-18: Our epistle for Mass this weekend is a teaching about the universality of salvation through the redemptive work on the Cross. Prior to the coming of the Messiah, only the Jewish people were the chosen people. The Gentiles had been given no such grace; it had been reserved to the people to whom God had promised the Messiah. The Gentiles had all manner of false gods, but they did not know the true God. Thus, one of the great results of the Redemption wrought by Christ and by God's mercy, is that the Gentiles have been admitted to the covenants God made with the patriarchs, covenants which contained the promise that a Messiah would bring salvation. This fulfilled the promise made to Abraham that through him all the families of the earth should count themselves blessed. By His death on the cross, Jesus has broken down the barriers dividing Jews from Gentiles and also those which kept God and man apart. Prior to Jesus' coming, man was excluded from the Father's house, living like a slave rather than as a son. But in the fullness of time, God sent His Son to give us the spirit of sonship that enables us to call God our Father.

Gospel: Mark 6:30-34: In our Gospel passage, the Twelve have returned from their first mission and are telling Jesus all about their mission. Mark does not specify the length of time they had been gone, but they are reporting to Jesus all they had done and taught. Jesus had given them a share in His mission; what they did was an extension of what He had being doing, multiplying its effects. Some try to change the world by the force of their ideas; others try to gain political or military power. Continued on the next page...

Continued from the previous page.. Jesus used a different method to achieve world-shaking results: He took ordinary people and asked them to carry on His work, empowering them to battle the evils that afflicted others, authorizing them to speak in His name. the sending out of the Twelve prefigures the mission of every follower of Jesus. It was hard work, and they were exhausted. Jesus knows well the toll His work takes on Him, and He has compassion for His apostles in their weariness. They, like Jesus, were being mobbed by people seeking them. They had a hard time finding time to eat! Sharing in Jesus' mission means sharing His burdens and, ultimately, sharing His cross. So, He invites them to come to a deserted place and rest a bit. Off they went by boat to spend some time alone with Jesus. But, it was not to be. People still need to have their unmet needs ministered to by Jesus and the Twelve. People see Jesus and the disciples leave by boat, so they depart hastily by foot from neighboring towns and are waiting for them when the boat comes ashore. Jesus sees them and has pity. He sees that they are like sheep without a shepherd, so He begins to teach them many things.

Reflection: Jesus' apostles had completed their first successful missionary endeavor. After being with Him for a long time, under His tutelage and guidance, they had been sent out to be His ambassadors, to announce His message and testify to its truth. Now, they returned to report their progress. We know from the other evangelists that this moment of reunion is full of rejoicing and energy: they had experienced the great power of God working through them, moving people's hearts through their words and deeds. And how does Jesus respond? He takes them aside to rest, to be with Him again in the quiet intimacy of their small community. The lesson is clear but hard to put into practice: active apostles, Christians who are energetically engaged in evangelizing the world around them, need to complement their activity with contemplation, with time spent in personal dialogue with the Lord. Without prayer and study and time alone with God, our well will soon run dry: we will have nothing substantial to offer others. But without action, without giving freely to others what we have freely received from God, our spiritual waters will become stagnant and lifeless like a lake with no outlet. Contemplation and action, prayer and work: such was Christ's way, and such should be every Christian's way. Perhaps this week, we might ponder the following: 1) what particular share in Jesus' mission has He entrusted to me; 2) what toll has doing the work of Jesus taken on me? How has Jesus rejuvenated me?; 3) who around me is like a sheep without a shepherd? How can I tell them about Jesus and lead them to Him? Lord, guide my words and the example of my witness. Draw others to your side through me.
