We watch as the Kerygma is developed for the first time

Last week we said that in these seven Sundays of Easter the First Reading would be taken from the book of the Acts of the Apostles, replacing temporarily the custom tradition of texts from the Old Testament. We'll learn about the beginning of the Church.

A newness was introduced within the preaching of the Apostles, who insisted on three ideas:

Jesus Christ was the Son of God, the Messiah,
That He had experienced Passion and death,
and He had risen from the dead.

This is what scholars have called "Kerygma" a Greek word that might be translated as something like "The Paschal Mystery of Jesus Christ."

In the first years of the early Church it was never preached about where Jesus had been born, who his parents were, or about his miracles, his parables, and other important events of his life. All this would come later, when the gospels were written, about 30 years after Jesus' Resurrection and Ascension.

The apostles considered that it was urgent to preach only about those three most important facts, and they were right because this form of preaching moved thousands to ask for the Christian Baptism. .

Today's first reading tells of the formation of the early Church as we hear Peter address the people on the day of Pentecost, when he proclaimed that Jesus of Nazareth, whom the Jews crucified, was the Messiah promised by God and eagerly awaited by the righteous of the Old Testament. It is him the One and Only, who has gloriously crowned God's saving plan for mankind.

The Holy Spirit has come upon the apostles on that day and now Peter, the chief apostle and spokesman for the group, addresses the crowd of pilgrims who are outside the upper room, attracted by the sound of the coming of the Spirit.

Peter preached,

«...Jesus the Nazorean was a man commended to you by God with mighty deeds, wonders, and signs, which God worked through him in your midst,...you killed, using lawless men to crucify him...But God raised him up...For David says of him: "I saw the Lord ever before me, with him at my right hand I shall not be disturbed...Therefore my heart has been glad...because you will not abandon my soul to the netherworld, nor will you suffer your holy one to see corruption...you will fill me with joy in your presence"...My brothers, one can confidently say to you about the patriarch David that he died and was buried, and his tomb is in our midst to this day...»

Since David has died, the psalm cannot apply to him. This argument is following a set pattern:

- (1) Scripture says;
- 2) the words apply either to the one speaking in the text or to another;
- 3) they do not apply to the speaker;
- 4) therefore they apply to another, namely Jesus.

We have Saint Peter, acting as a masterful teacher, demonstrating that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah who was foretold by the prophets. Peter reminds his listeners of our Lord's mighty deeds, as well as of His death, resurrection and glorious ascension.

This preaching of Peter was pure kerygma.

WANT TO READ MORE?

Every week I publish a reflection for each of the three readings of the Sunday Mass, a week ahead.

I invite you to go to our website at www.stmarktampa.org, click "MASS TIMES" at the top and then scroll down to "SUNDAY MASS REFLECTIONS".

We celebrate the Feast of Saint Mark the Evangelist this Tuesday, April 25th.

We join in prayer in a special way with all of the parishioners of St. Mark on our patronal feast day, but it is really a feast for all of us who are followers of Jesus. Just as Mark recounts the stories of how Jesus called people to follow him, Jesus also beckons us. We are not only disciples, we are evangelists.

In the Gospel of Mark, in quite vivid images and stories, we read about how Jesus himself establishes evangelization as the very nature and essence of the Church. Jesus gives his disciples the commission to evangelize, that is, to announce the good news “to all the nations,” and to spread the Gospel by going forth “into the world” and to proclaim the gospel to every creature (Mark 13:10, Mark 16:15). This commission is shared by all those who are baptized. The laity has a particular responsibility to share in the work of proclamation. At the Second Vatican Council, the Council Fathers wrote, “The laity go forth as powerful proclaimers...announcing Christ by a living testimony, as well as by the spoken word.” (Lumen Gentium, 35).

Today, the Gospel of Mark invites us to ask ourselves, how do we bring others to the Risen Lord? We ask ourselves this question, not in a rhetorical way but with a sense of urgency. Urgency is the word that Pope Benedict XVI used when he visited the US in 2008. He preached, “While it is true that this country is marked by a genuinely religious spirit, the subtle influence of secularism can nevertheless color the way people allow their faith to influence their behavior...only when their faith permeates every aspect of their life do Christians become truly open to the power of the Gospel.” (Homily at Vespers, Basilica of the National Shrine).

The sense of urgency comes not just from our care and concern for people we know whose lives could be changed for the better if they had a relationship with Our Lord or returned to active participation in the church, but also because we live in a culture that is threatening to limit the public expression of faith in our country. Scripture scholars believe that Mark’s Gospel was written to bolster the courage of Jesus’ followers to remain faithful witnesses in the face of persecution, and this message is timely once more. Actions as small as saying grace when out to dinner in a restaurant, or wearing a religious symbol around our neck or on a lapel are statements of a faith that permeates our daily life. Engaging in conversation with others about why our faith is so important to us ought to be something we practice so that it becomes a natural part of our conversations.

So many of the people in Mark’s Gospel who were touched by Jesus attracted others to him because people noticed how they were changed by the encounter with him. A life marked by faith expressed in words or in actions has a way of attracting other people to Jesus. That is the work of the New Evangelization that today’s disciples are called to do, following in the path of St. Mark and the other early disciples who became evangelists by leading others to Christ.
