WONDERFUL BENEFITS of ECOLOGICAL BREASTFEEDING

Ecological Breastfeeding is a pattern of breastfeeding based on seven maternal behaviors that keep mother and baby together and allow frequent suckling. We call them the Seven Standards of Ecological Breastfeeding. Exclusive Breastfeeding is the first of these seven standards, but it lasts for only six months or so. The other Standards such as "Don't use pacifiers," "Don't use bottles," and "Take your baby with you" are counter-cultural, but mothers who do Ecological Breastfeeding love it. Their baby will have reduced risks of contracting at least 20 nasty diseases, and mothers will also experience reduced risks of contracting breast cancer and at least seven other diseases. No pharmaceutical product or behavioral process can come close to these benefits. Parents experience the joy that comes from doing what they know is best for their baby, and they also appreciate not having to buy any formula, probably saving about $2,000 with each baby. Mothers also love not having a first period until 14 to 15 months postpartum. (That's an average with both shorter and longer durations of not having periods). Visit the NFPI website www.nfpandmore.org and you will see several books on this subject. Just recently (mid-January) we received a gracious letter from a mother who delivered a baby 27 months after her first baby, the spacing due solely to Ecological Breastfeeding. U.S. Supreme Court writing transgenderism into law is the ‘Roe v. Wade of religious liberty’

June 16, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) – Staunch conservatives have slammed the Supreme Court ruling in Bostock v. Clayton County, which redefined the term “sex” in the 1964 Civil Rights Act to mean not simply “male” and “female” as biological facts, but also “sexual orientation” and “gender identity.”

Josh Hammer of First Liberty Institute called the decision by six justices the “Roe v. Wade of religious liberty.” Following Bostock v. Clayton, he asked, “Can a Catholic school deny employment to a teacher whose sexual lifestyle blatantly flouts millennia of Catholic moral teaching [e.g., a man who dresses as a woman, or vice-versa]? Can an Orthodox Jewish day school refuse to hire a male teacher who self-identifies as a woman, contravening traditional teaching rooted in Genesis?”

Hammer insisted on “mak[ing] moral arguments in court, based on principles of justice, natural law (the rules embedded in our very nature as human beings), the common good and the religious and moral traditions underlying Anglo-American constitutional order.” Speaking of Gorsuch’s majority opinion, he said: “It’s ivory-tower liberalism. And it’s completely at odds with the Supreme Court’s longstanding dictum that Congress, in drafting statutes, won’t inscribe a hidden meaning in otherwise plain language: As Justice Samuel Alito sharply noted in dissent, ‘sex,’ in 1964, meant biological sex — man and woman — not orientation and certainly not subjective gender identity.”

Hans von Spakovsky and Ryan T. Anderson, who are both part of the Heritage Foundation, described the Supreme Court ruling as “an act of judicial activism,” with the majority having “simply legislated from the bench and amended the statute itself.” They pointed out, “Congress has not legislated such an outcome, and it was wrong for the court to usurp lawmakers’ authority by imposing such an extreme policy on our nation without the consent of the governed,” echoing the dissent written by Justice Samuel Alito.

Michael Farris, the founder of the Home School Legal Defense Association, spoke of “an enormous loss” for people with a biblical worldview. “People who legitimately believe that God created us male and female are going to face increased efforts to silence, marginalize, and penalize any dissent,” he predicted.

Popular Protestant preacher Franklin Graham, son of the late Billy Graham, said “this decision erodes religious freedoms across this country. People of sincere faith who stand on God’s Word as their foundation for life should never be forced by the government to compromise their religious beliefs.” He stressed that Christian organizations “should never be forced to hire people who do not align with their biblical beliefs and should not be prevented from terminating a person whose lifestyle and beliefs undermine the ministry’s purpose and goals.”

Similarly, Catholic Bishop Joseph Strickland of Tyler, Texas, tweeted, “Lord forgive our arrogance! The highest court of our land may be called Supreme but woe unto us if we ignore GOD’S SUPREME TRUTH.”

Catholic priest and canon lawyer Father Gerald Murray said: “We have entered the nightmare world in which each person can not only define for himself the meaning of life, but also deny the reality of his own body, now counting on the federal government to force the rest to buy into that delusion or face the coercive power of the state.” It appears Murray was referencing retired Justice Anthony Kennedy’s infamous treatise in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, which said in part: “At the heart of liberty is the right to define one’s own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life.” Murray added, “This is what happens when metaphysical realism is abandoned and the will to power takes over as the guiding principle of judicial analysis.”
