FROM FR. FRAN

A liturgical composer colleague of mine, Peter Kolar, is the director of the diocesan choir for the Diocese of El Paso, Texas. This week, in a social media post, he related his involvement with a number of funerals for victims of the recent Walmart shooting in El Paso. I'd like to share a bit of his post, because I think it shows us a side of this tragedy that we don't experience in the sound bites of the media and in the posturing of our politicians. While Peter's experience speaks to the raw sadness of such a horrible act of violence, it also speaks to the faith we have in a loving God, even in the darkest hours.

Peter began his post by saying that he offered his assistance and that of his diocesan choir to the funeral homes and churches planning burials for the victims. His choir members immediately stopped everything they were doing to help out. Last Friday and Saturday they ministered at three funerals, two back to back in different parts of town.

The first funeral was for an 86 year old woman named Angie. Peter said that it was an uplifting celebration of her life with a packed church that, as he put it: "sang her from this earth to heaven's gate".

Immediately following this funeral, Peter and his choir ministered in another church at the funeral for a 77 year old man named Juan, a naturalized citizen who moved to El Paso to escape the violence in his native Juarez, Mexico. Peter said that the celebration was smaller and that there was a palpable sadness in the pews. Juan's wife, Nicolasa, who was wounded in the attack, was transported from the hospital by ambulance and was assisted from a wheelchair by medical personnel. After the mass, the pastor expressed his gratitude that Peter and the choir were there, otherwise there would have been no music.

The next day the group ministered music at the funeral for a boy named Javier, at 15 years old, the youngest of the victims. Peter and the choir sensed that this would be the hardest and most emotional goodbye of the weekend. Javier's uncle, who was with him at the time of the shooting and seriously wounded himself, was transported from the hospital to attend. One of the songs sung at the mass was called "Deseo Paz", a plea for peace and an end to senseless violence. Peter concluded by writing that "upon procession of Javier's casket out of the church, the entire crowd waved white cloths above their heads in farewell to this beloved child of God."

I relate Peter's powerful experience as an opportunity to put names and stories to the great human tragedy befalling our country. Along with these Catholic brothers and sisters we weep for all those who fall victim to senseless violence.

As Catholic Christians we must also put names and faces to our sisters and brothers who seek asylum in our country only to be turned away or separated from their loved ones by governmental policies that don't have to be carried out in cruel and unchristian ways.

Regardless of what side of the political aisle we find ourselves on, we are first and foremost citizens of heaven, a privilege that was won by Jesus' death and resurrection. Citizens of heaven, followers of Christ, abide by the greatest law of all, the law of love. It supersedes everything else.

So when we are in discussions about gun violence, talking about the banning of assault weapons and the rights afforded by the second amendment, we must speak and act out of the law of love. When racist remarks are thrown around and white supremacy is the topic of the day, we must speak and act out of the law of love. When we hear words that demean and disrespect others, when people take pot shots at another person's or group's dignity, when people are denied the human right to have a place where they can live in safety, we must speak and act out of the law of love.

There are no easy answers to our country's ills. However, as Catholic Christians, we are missioned by our baptism to bring Christ's law of love into the mix of our everyday living and in the living out of our civic duties. For in the end, when we meet God face to face, there will no longer be countries and governments, there will no longer be the rich and the poor, and no group will hold superiority over another. Only one thing will endure – a divine and eternal love for each and every person into whom God has breathed the breath of life.

Funeral Greeting Ministry Needs Volunteers

One of the most important parts of our funeral ministry occurs just before the funeral mass begins. Each person entering the church is greeted warmly and given the worship booklet especially prepared for the funeral

We are in need of more parishioners to volunteer to be greeters at our parish funerals. The ministry consists of arriving about one half hour before a funeral, (funerals are usually scheduled for 10 a.m.), greeting folks, handing out booklets and answering any questions worshipers might have. In all, this would be about a two hour commitment once every month or six weeks, depending on the number of greeters and funerals.

If you are interested or would like to know more about this ministry please speak with any of us on the parish staff or give a call to the office 508-480-9255.
