Rich in the Sight of God

What we do with our possessions reveals the kind of people we are. In a way, they are an extension of ourselves.

The parable in today's Gospel shows just how the hunger for more possessions can isolate us and cut us off from life. A farmer has a good harvest and instead of giving thanks to God for such abundance he turns in on himself. He does not have enough room for his crops so he decides to build larger barns which will house them. He doesn't plan to store the food to help his neighbors in time of famine. No, he is only interested in himself. He can protect himself from the problems of ordinary people. His use of the well-known Epicurean motto, Rest, eat, drink, and be merry demonstrates the disastrous effect of greed in promoting his own enjoyment. He forgets the end of that ancient formula: tomorrow we die.

In the second reading, St. Paul tells us that greed is the same thing as worshipping false idols. In our acquisitive society, we are urged to buy what we do not really need. Greed isolates and divides communities and families. Today's readings encourage us to seek our security in God's providence, not in possessions. Trust in God, the giver of life and all things, conquer fear, and have the joy of sharing possessions with those in need.
