Christian Hope

Be like servants who await their master's return from a wedding, ready to open immediately when he comes and knocks. These are words of encouragement by Our Lord to practice the virtue of hope.

Not just any kind of hope. There is such a thing as natural hope which inclines a person to be positive about the future. That kind of hope keeps us from yearning uselessly for the past where it had been good, and not being overcome by past experiences which had been bad. Natural hope can help us to be unafraid of the present, yet not complacent. It is a useful attitude to have, and it has no other object in view than our general welfare.

It is not the hope of the return from the wedding feast. That is theological hope. Why theological? Because we live in a God-centered creation where divine action has already laid out the plan for human salvation.

Theological hope is different from natural hope because it originates from God. It is a God-given way of thinking and behaving. Theological hope also has a specific content. It is our expectation to share in the life of God.

Along with Faith and Charity, Christian Hope is a supernatural virtue. It doesn't have to do with personality or style. It is divinely infused and makes us members of the Mystical Body. Christian Hope is seen in habits of mind and action that have God as the goal of a person's life.
