A REFLECTION FROM DEACON CORY FORD | 3

June 26, 2022 | 13th Sunday in Ordinary Time

Where is our home? Today's readings seek to make us ask this question of ourselves as well as give us the answer of where we call home. This question is asked because none of us is called to live in one place our entire life. Think about all the places you have lived in your life. Can you think of a childhood home? Or maybe a college dorm room? Maybe, when you think of home, the first house you bought comes to mind. All these places are dwellings; they are all houses, but they are not your home. We have only one home, and that home is the same place where Christ can rest his head. Our true home is heaven.

This is what we see in the readings for today. Take Elijah and Elisha from the first reading. Elijah is an itinerant prophet; he is constantly moving, and we know nothing of his origin, other than his background as a Tishbite. We read that his life is spent wandering and doing the will of God. If Elijah decided to settle down and build himself a house, the work of God would not have been done. This idea of not having a home is echoed in the call of Elisha, the prophet who followed Elijah. When Elijah throws his cloak over the shoulders of Elisha, he realizes his call to serve God. This realization causes Elisha to sacrifice everything he has, his tools, his animals, his lifestyle, in order to follow the will of God. We are called to do the same thing.

God calls all of us to follow him. This call, while not as extreme as the call of Elijah and Elisha, is still a call to follow God. We all get this call because we are not meant for this world: we are wayfarers. God wants us to be with him, and we do this by following his call here on earth that directs us to the Heavenly Kingdom. The call today of Jesus in the Gospel proves this. Jesus calls a young man to follow him, but because he is too focused on this world, as seen in his attachment to his family, he is not "fit for the kingdom of God" as Jesus says today. So how do we live a life focused on God here in this life? This can look different for every person.

There are those like priests who are called to give up everything they have to live a life totally dedicated to God and the service of his people. There are also religious brothers and sisters who do the same, giving up their life in service to God totally. But the religious life is not the only way to hear God's call and to live a life totally dedicated to Him. All are called in their own way. God calls some to the married life and to be parents, others to the single, consecrated life. These calls are no less holy than the call to be a priest. No matter our call, it is up to each individual person to find out how to live a holy life. By living out our own call to holiness, we keep our eyes on our true home, our heavenly home.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION

by Frank J. Sheed

(excerpts from "Theology for Beginners")

Besides the Real Presence which faith accepts and delights in, there is the doctrine of transubstantiation, from which we may at least get a glimpse of what happens when the priest consecrates bread and wine, so that they become Christ's body and Christ's blood.

At this stage, we must be content with only the simplest statement of the meaning of, and distinction between substance and accidents, without which we should make nothing at all of transubstantiation. We shall concentrate upon bread, reminding ourselves once again that what is said applies in principle to wine as well.

We look at the bread the priest uses in the Sacrament. It is white, round, soft. The whiteness is not the bread, it is simply a quality that the bread has; the same is true of the roundness and the softness. There is something there that has these and other properties, qualities, attributes- the philosophers call all of them accidents. Whiteness and roundness we see; softness brings in the sense of touch. We might smell bread, and the smell of new bread is wonderful, but once again the smell is not the bread, but simply a property. The something which has the whiteness, the softness, the roundness, has the smell; and if we try another sense, the sense of taste, the same something has that special effect upon our palate.

In other words, whatever the senses perceive - even with the aid of those instruments men are forever inventing to increase the reach of the senses - is always of this same sort, a quality, a property, an attribute; no sense perceives the something which has all these qualities, which is the thing itself. This something is what the philosophers call substance; the rest are accidents which it possesses. Our senses perceive accidents; only the mind knows the substance. This is true of bread, it is true of every created thing. Left to itself, the mind assumes that the substance is that which, in all its past experience, has been found to have that particular group of accidents. But in these two instances, the bread and wine of the Eucharist, the mind is not left to itself. By the revelation of Christ it knows that the substance has been changed, in the one case into the substance of his body, in the other into the substance of his blood.

The senses can no more perceive the new substance resulting from the consecration than they could have perceived the substance there before. We cannot repeat too often that senses can perceive only accidents, and consecration changes only the substance. The accidents remain in their totality - for example, that which was wine and is now Christ's blood still has the smell of wine, the intoxicating power of wine. One is occasionally startled to find some scientist claiming to have put all the resources of his laboratory into testing the consecrated bread; he announces triumphantly that there is no change whatever, no difference between this and any other bread. We could have told him that, without the aid of any instrument. For all that instruments can do is to make contact with the accidents, and it is part of the doctrine of transubstantiation that the accidents undergo no change whatever. If our scientist had announced that he had found a change, that would be really startling and upsetting.

The accidents, then, remain; but not, of course, as accidents of Christ's body. It is not his body which has the whiteness and the roundness and the softness. The accidents once held in existence by the substance of bread, and those others once held in existence by the substance of wine, are now held in existence solely by God's will to maintain them.

What of Christ's body, now sacramentally present? We must leave the philosophy of this for a later stage in our study. All we shall say here is that his body is wholly present, though not (so St. Thomas among others tells us) extended in space. One further element in the doctrine of the Real Presence needs to be stated: Christ's body remains in the communicant as long as the accidents remain themselves. Where, in the normal action of our bodily processes, they are so changed as to be no longer accidents of bread or accidents of wine, the Real Presence in us of Christ's own individual body ceases. But we live on in his Mystical Body.

The Gate-Corner Here's another jewel from your Catechism of the Catholic Church

Jesus chose the time of Passover to fulfill what he had announced at Capernaum: giving his disciples his Body and his Blood:

Then came the day of Unleavened Bread, on which the passover lamb had to be sacrificed. So Jesus sent Peter and John, saying, "Go and prepare the passover meal for us, that we may eat it. . . ." They went . . . and prepared the passover. And when the hour came, he sat at table, and the apostles with him. And he said to them, "I have earnestly desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I tell you I shall not eat it again until it is fulfilled in the kingdom of God." . . . And he took bread, and when he had given thanks he broke it and gave it to them, saying, "This is my body which is given for you. Do this in remembrance of me." And likewise the cup after supper, saying, "This cup which is poured out for you is the New Covenant in my blood."

By celebrating the Last Supper with his apostles in the course of the Passover meal, Jesus gave the Jewish Passover its definitive meaning. Jesus' passing over to his father by his death and Resurrection, the new Passover, is anticipated in the Supper and celebrated in the Eucharist, which fulfills the Jewish Passover and anticipates the final Passover of the Church in the glory of the kingdom. CCC 1339-40
