Twenty-third Sunday in Ordinary Time, September 9, 2018

Did not God choose those who are poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs to the kingdom?

—James 2:5

WHAT MAKES THE SACRAMENTS?:

I did most of my initial Catholic formation at inner city Catholic schools in Baltimore, where most of the children were poor, came from one-parent families, and witnessed crime, violence and drugs on almost a daily basis. So no story scandalized them, unlike me who lived in the countryside. When Sister related real life stories as examples in her teaching, my classmates were unfazed. I, on the other hand, took in all of these stories with fascination and, at times, horror.

I recall one story when she was teaching us about the sacraments, a lesson that was also meant to warn us of the dangers of alcohol. A priest had a habit of imbibing too much in the drink, so much so that he was often found passed out and had to be shaken awake by the sacristan, who came every morning to open the church and prepare for Mass, and would also prepare a hangover cure in the form of a pot of black coffee and a plate of eggs and sausages. One Sunday morning, with the Church full of parishioners, the priest began to celebrate Mass in his post-drunk haze. His head throbbed and hammered during the readings and the hymns, and his only care was about getting rid of his pain and nausea. At the time of the consecration of the bread and wine, all the priest could focus on was the cure for his bad humor: the bottle of whisky in the sacristy. When the time of communion arrived, the priest recognized the graveness of what he had done, and just after the kiss of peace, he apologized to the congregation, went into the sacristy, and brought out the blessed bottle. Because his attention had been squarely fixed on the rye, it, and not the wine on the altar, had been transformed into the Blood of Christ.

As an adult and as a priest, I am now fully aware that this is a ridiculous story. However, this is also a useful story for helping us to really understand the relationship between the priest and the sacraments that he ministers. The priest is the representative of Christ and the usual or “ordinary” minister of the sacraments. In certain circumstances, the ordinary minister is someone else, such as the bishop who does ordinations, or deacons who can preside at baptisms or weddings, just like the priests. In weddings, the bride and groom make the sacrament in God with one another. Some exceptions are also made wherein even a non-Catholic might minister the sacrament, such as an emergency baptism where someone is in imminent danger of death and desires to be baptized. The sacraments, therefore, do not depend on the holiness of the person who administers them, but on Jesus Christ, who is the one who actually the minister of the sacrament. Remember that sacraments are the “outward sign of an invisible reality,” i.e., that they are encounters with, reception of, and incorporation into the life of grace with the Trinity.

In addition, the whole Church, both lay people and clergy play a crucial role in making the sacraments holy where it is lacking. We make up for the lack of holiness, to a certain extent, through our own holiness as members of the Body of Christ. Of course, we expect, desire and pray that our priests are holy, and certainly I ask that you pray for all of us priests who serve you. But priests are human beings who are just as faulty as any other human being, and for this reason, we do not rely on the priest's holiness to make the sacrament efficacious or effective.

In addition, the sacraments are holy despite the individual nature of the priest because they do not come from him, but from the tradition handed down to us from Jesus Christ through the Apostles. What we do and what we learn remains consistent. A pope, cardinal, bishop, or priest might highlight certain aspects of the teaching over others, but the teaching remains the same. Those who teach erroneously are corrected, and even if they disregard their censures or penalties, they cannot change the teaching and tradition of the whole Church, and that includes the sacraments.

So let us pray that the whole Church, whether lay people, religious, or clerics, may strive to live holy lives, and allow people to experience the fullness of grace through the sacraments.

POPE FRANCIS' INTENTION FOR SEPTEMBER:

"Africa is a wealthy continent, and its greatest, most valuable resource is its young people. They should be able to choose between letting themselves be overcome by difficulty or transforming the difficulty into an opportunity. The most effective way to help them in this choice is to invest in their education. If young people don't have the possibility of education, what future can they have? Let us pray that young people in Africa may have access to education and work in their own countries."

SEE BEYOND OUTWARD APPEARANCES

The phrase “Sunday best” has lost much of its meaning in our society today. Some lament the loss of people dressing up for church on Sunday; others think it’s a healthy sign that we’re as casual in attire gathered before the Lord as we are elsewhere. No matter which school of thought on this topic we belong to, James would probably chastise us. In either case, we are still focused on external appearance, mistaking it for some sort of favored position before God. True, James criticizes the community that favors the rich and well-dressed while ostracizing the poorly clothed, but even more he criticizes the making of distinctions, making choices based on criteria that having nothing to do with the reign of God. James might turn our attention to the reign of God described by Isaiah, in which people are healed and the earth becomes ripe to bear fruit. Jesus today is focused on this reign of God, healing a Gentile man in a region hostile to his Jewish faith, not mindful of the man’s origins or clothing or status or ability to repay. Isaiah, James, and Jesus in Mark’s Gospel all call us to look more deeply to find where the will of God needs to be done, and has been done, on earth as in heaven. Copyright © J. S. Paluch Co., Inc.
