FROM THE PASTOR

On Being Sent

The work Jesus entrusts to the seventy-two he now entrusts to us, his church of today. But, as many of us have discovered, announcing about the kingdom of God is not always an easy experience. We sometimes feel like “lambs” sent out among wolves, at times dealing with the selfishness, cynicism and resentment of those we’re trying to help. But Jesus promises that despite the stumbles along the way, our works of peace will make a difference not because they are successful but because they are right. Like the seventy-two in today’s Gospel, Jesus appoints every disciple of every time and place to go before him to be his ministers of compassion, reconciliation and hope to this needy world.

Jesus calls the seventy-two — and now all of us — “to reveal the presence of God” in every ordinary life, and to do so not with a sense of superiority or self-righteousness but in a spirit of gratitude and humility. As we work to make a difference in our “neighbors” lives, we make a difference in our own: namely, the peace we work for touches us and our own families, and helps to change the way we see ourselves and others.

May God help each of us to say “Yes” to his invitation to follow.
