DIVINE MERCY SUNDAY

The closed-in-space provides the setting for John 20:19-31
for 'the interior of the person.'
Jesus appears in the middle of the closed room
as he manifests his presence within his soul,
still shut within his fears…
In the heart's house, my cautious soul and I,
Assured ourselves of many a bolt and bar
We left no latch for any hand to try,
No careless casement wide, no door ajar
But we were fearful, though not why,
Facing each other in that quiet room.
And so we dragged stout logic to the door
And braced it fast, and tied the shutters hard
With tough-thonged Reason for our Faith, worn thin,
And turned, hearing footfall on the floor,
For, with each entrance doubly locked and barred,
Suddenly came Christ, and stood therein.

Thomas was spiritually stronger than the others
in declaring his hunger for physical proof of the resurrection.
Timidity fails to voice its desire.
Better to voice our doubts in earnest struggle than quietly give up on God.
Thomas is a bridge for all future believers.
"Mistaken turnings, confused demands and unfocused longings are all part of the journey."
The struggle for faith is not a level road to perfection:
misunderstandings and a bumpy ride are par for the course.
Thomas represents us. Rather than judge Thomas,
the Gospel hopes we will identify with him:
this is a basis for comfort and hope, not condemnation.
