Good morning, everyone!

It's me, Titan!

While Holly and I were starting to explore all of your awesome classrooms, we saw just how much you all get to learn from your amazing teachers here at school.

We saw so many cool things that you were working on!

These stick structures are so amazing. They remind us of the planning we do when we build igloos.

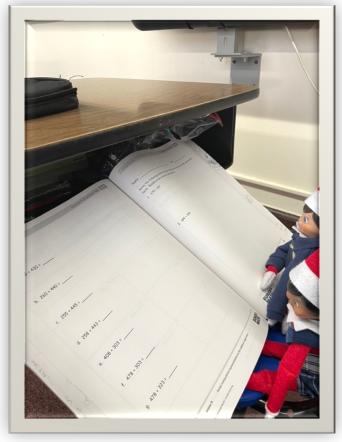

Another classroom had this incredible counting board. We wish we had one of these back at the North Pole to help the List Elves keep track of how many kids are on the "Naughty" and "Nice" Lists. It would probably help them a lot!

Holly and I also really like your desks too. You each have your own space to keep your books and supplies! It's cool that you each have your own special spot in your classroom!

We may have peeked into a desk here and there to see what kinds of stuff you learn. Most of our math problems when we go to school involve word problems that count cookies or presents.

One of the coolest things we found was this assignment that was all about a Christmas book called "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever"! It was on a paper titled "December Book Review". We read all about this book – which received 5-stars! We are hoping to get a copy to read over our summer break!

Do you have a favorite Christmas book? Holly and I have the same favorite – want to take a guess? We'll give you one hint – the main character has a green tint!

That's it for now!

Love, Titan and Holly
