A Voice Crying Out in the Desert

No one in Israel had ever done what the Baptist was doing in the Jordan. It was unheard of to baptize repentant sinners publicly one by one. Word of the novelty got around. People came from far and wide to wade toward him in the water or watch in wonderment from the shore.

Who was this man anyway? What in the world was he up to? Everyone asked these questions. Some visiting priests from Jerusalem had the nerve to fling them in the Baptizer's face. His answer was a model of intriguing concision: he told them he was not the Christ, not Elijah, not the Prophet. They would find in him no king, wonderworker, or lawgiver.

John's threefold denial only baffled his questioners the more. If he wasn't Christ, Elijah, or Prophet, then what was his baptizing for? What on earth did it mean? These men expected an answer they could get their hands around, an answer that would make sense of the widely appealing behavior John had made peculiarly his own. "Who are you, so we can give an answer to those who sent us?"

It was a natural cycle of curiosity: people went out to see for themselves the strange events they'd heard were taking place in the desert, and the activity they witnessed there led them to question John's identity. Watching what John did led them to wonder who he was.

John's reply revealed that he'd worked through that question himself. His identity was not to be found in splendid or rugged isolation, nor did his activity result from self-determination. Rather, he describes himself in Scripture as someone always and everywhere in relation to Another, whose sandal strap he was unworthy to loose. John confessed himself to be nothing more than a "voice" clearing a path in the darkness for the Word of Life to shine forth God's saving light.

John knew very well that "he was not the light." Rather he had been "sent from God" in order to "testify to the light." His baptizing bore witness that "the true light that enlightens every man was coming into the world." And that light bearer, John claimed, was "one who is mightier than I."

You did not need to hear these clarifying words to sense that there was more to the man clothed in camel's hair than met the eye. For according to St. Mark, "all the country of Judea and all the people of Jerusalem" went out to him to be plunged into the waters of hope. They came in advance of explanation. They didn't wait on the priests' questions and John's answers to respond to his unauthorized, out-of-nowhere call to repentance. They simply stepped away from the ground beneath their feet into the flowing stream of the Jordan, not knowing where it might carry them, but trusting that it would wash them up on a new shore, where the crooked, conflicted paths of their life could be made straight.

Watching what John did led his observers to wonder who he was. And that led them to wonder who they were and what they were doing or not doing about it. Is it any different for us, looking on 2,000 years later? Don't we too long to "recognize" the "One who is mightier," to "believe in His name," and to receive "power to become children of God"? That is still the inviting promise of the voice crying in the desert.

Pensamientos A Lo Largo Del Camino

La Voz Clamando en el Desierto

Esta columna fue publicada en la edición del 17 de Diciembre del 2017 de la Crónica Diocesana.

Nadie en Israel había hecho lo que el Bautista estaba haciendo en el Jordán. Era inaudito el bautizar públicamente a pecadores arrepentidos uno por uno. Noticia de la novedad se extendió. La gente venía de todas partes para caminar hacia él en el agua o mirar con asombro desde la orilla.

¿Quién era este hombre? ¿Qué es lo que estaba haciendo? Todos hacían estas preguntas. Algunos sacerdotes visitantes de Jerusalén se atrevieron a gritárselas en cara al Bautista. Su respuesta fue un modelo de concisión intrigante: les dijo que él no era el Cristo, ni Elías, ni el Profeta. En él no encontrarían a un rey, a alguien que hiciera milagros, o a un legislador.

La triple negación de Juan aún más desconcertó a sus interrogadores. Si él no era el Cristo, ni Elías, ni el Profeta, entonces, ¿para qué bautizaba? ¿Qué significaba? Estos hombres esperaban una respuesta que pudieran agarrar en sus manos, una respuesta que tendría sentido del comportamiento ampliamente atractivo que Juan había hecho peculiarmente el suyo. "¿Quién eres tú, para dar una respuesta a los que nos enviaron?"

Era un ciclo natural de curiosidad: la gente salió a ver por sí mismos los extraños sucesos de los que habían escuchado y que tenían lugar en el desierto, y la actividad que presenciaron allí los llevó a cuestionar la identidad de Juan. Ver lo que hizo Juan los llevó a preguntarse quién era.

La respuesta de Juan reveló que él mismo había enfrentado esa pregunta. Su identidad no se encontraba en un aislamiento espléndido, ni su actividad resultó de la autodeterminación. Más bien, él se describe a sí mismo en las Escrituras como alguien siempre y en todas partes en relación con Otro, cuyas correas de la sandalia era indigno de desatar. Juan confesó que él mismo no era más que una "voz" despejando un camino en la oscuridad para que la Palabra de Vida brille la luz salvadora de Dios.

Juan sabía muy bien que "él no era la luz". Más bien había sido "enviado por Dios" para "dar testimonio de la luz". Su bautismo fue testigo de que "la verdadera luz que ilumina a cada hombre estaba llegando al mundo". Y ese portador de la luz, decía Juan, era "uno que es más poderoso que yo".

Tu no necesitabas escuchar estas palabras de clarificación para sentir que había más en el hombre vestido de pelo de camello que a primera vista. Porque según San Marcos, “Toda la región de Judea y todos los habitantes de Jerusalén acudían a él” para sumergirse en las aguas de la esperanza. Fueron antes de la explicación. No esperaron las preguntas de los sacerdotes y las respuestas de Juan para responder a su llamado al arrepentimiento que nadie había autorizado. Simplemente se alejaron del suelo bajo sus pies en la corriente fluyente del Jordán, sin saber hacia dónde podría llevarlos, pero confiando en que los llevaría hacia en una nueva orilla, donde los senderos torcidos y conflictivos de su vida podrían hacerse rectos.

Ver lo que hizo Juan los llevó a sus observadores a preguntarse quién era. Y eso los llevó a preguntarse a sí mismos quienes eran ellos y lo que estaban o no estaban haciendo al respecto. ¿Acaso es diferente para nosotros, observando la misma escena 2,000 años después? ¿No anhelamos también “reconocer” al “que es más poderoso”, “creer en su nombre” y recibir “poder para convertirnos en hijos de Dios”? Esa sigue siendo la promesa invitante de la voz que clama en el desierto.

Christmas Traditions Are So Important—Especially This Year

While Christmas will definitely be different this year—and it might be tempting to give into the coronavirus dread and forget your family traditions— it may not be the best option. While we will need to adapt to local restrictions and ensure our safety, we can still hold onto some of the familiar traditions or even create new ones.

Christmas traditions to enjoy— even this year:

- * Take a car ride and enjoy the Christmas lights. Enjoy a drive-through light show or a car ride through a neighborhood decorated with Christmas lights. Also, don't forget to keep note of your favorite places to go see the lights so you won't forget to see them next year.
- * Create your own light show. If you don't want to go to a light show, you can create your own light show by decorating your home with various Christmas lights and decorations.
- * Bake Christmas cookies. Host a virtual baking competition with your friends or family and see who can bake the best cookies, or you could have a baking competition with family members living in your home.
- * Host a Secret Santa with friends. You can still enjoy Secret Santa with friends by delivering gifts to your friends home and dropping them off at the door without any contact.
- * Have a Christmas movie night. Have a Christmas movie marathon or a month long event where you watch one holiday movie every week until Christmas.
- * Be creative with alternatives to “store bought” gifts. Parents can help children make homemade gifts such as craft items, handwritten cards, baked goods, poems, memory books, etc.
- * Watch online performances. Gather together with your household members and watch online performances such as The Nutcracker.
- * Write a Christmas letter to friends and family. Especially this year, people may enjoy updates from friends and family.
- * Track Santa. Finally, don't forget to track Santa as he makes his trip around the world at NORADSanta.org.
- * Mass. If you are unable to attend Mass or church services, check with your Church to see if you are able to watch services online.

Dr. Martina Paglia, a psychologist at the International Psychology clinic, explained that traditions are more than just the simple act of putting up a Christmas tree or making gingerbread – these simple acts provide comfort, make you feel secure and safe, and allow you to bond with your loved ones. It is important to take time to think about which traditions you can carry on through this pandemic that will bring you and your family comfort. It could be as simple as putting up the Christmas tree together or watching a movie like A Charlie Brown Christmas. Most importantly be safe, adapt to change, and hold onto what brings you joy.

WHAT THE CARES ACT MEANS FOR CHARITABLE GIVING

The Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act creates two temporary changes to the tax treatment of such donations. One is a universal deduction targeted primarily at the 90+% of standard deduction taxpayers, and the other is meant to incentivize the remaining high-income givers and corporations.

$300

Universal Deduction for Donations Up to $300

For the 9 out of 10 people who no longer itemize their charitable giving, the CARES Act will allow these individual taxpayers to deduct donations to charity of up to $300 on their 2020 federal tax return, even though they take the standard deduction. Married-filing-jointly taxpayers will get an above-the-line deduction of up to $600.

60%

For those donors who are still able to itemize their deductions, and therefore directly write off gifts to charity, the current deduction cap is 60% of adjusted gross income. Corporations are able to deduct charitable donations up to 10% of taxable income.

*The 60% of AGI limit is for giving to 501(c)(3) public charities. The deductibility of gifts to 501(c)(3) private foundations is capped at 30%, and was not included in this legislation.

WHAT ABOUT THE IRA QUALIFIED CHARITABLE DISTRIBUTION (QCD)?

The CARES Act did not change the rules around the QCD, which allows individuals over 70½ years old to donate up to $100,000 in IRA assets directly to charity annually, without taking the distribution into taxable income.

However, remember that under the CARES Act an individual can elect to deduct 100 percent of their AGI for cash charitable contributions. This effectively affords individuals over 59½ years old the benefits similar to a QCD; they can take a cash distribution from their IRA, contribute the cash to charity, and may completely offset tax attributable to the distribution by taking a charitable deduction in an amount up to 100 percent of their AGI for the tax year.
