From the Desk of Deacon Chris....
HOW DOES JESUS FIT INTO MY LIFE?

One of the things I most appreciate about the Little Black Books that we use during the Season of Lent is the way the reflections make me think every day. This is how the reflection ended on Wednesday, March 2nd:

“How does Jesus fit into my life, my day-to-day consciousness? Sporadically? On the perimeter? Or, at the center? Talk to him about it.”

Now I’d like to tell you that Jesus is at the center of my day-to-day consciousness each and every day. Truth is, that is probably not the case every day. Some days I am very conscious of Jesus in my everyday life, but other days I get too caught up in other things; timelines I have to meet, meetings I have to plan, articles or homilies I need to write, family commitments I have to meet, or any number of other things.

All of those things are necessary and worthwhile, and sometimes I am very conscious of Jesus when I am doing them. I guess the question is whether I place my relationship with Jesus as most important, and whether I include Jesus in everything I do. Do I fully appreciate the grace and blessings he gives me, and do I know in my mind and heart that without Jesus, I am nothing?

Sometimes, if I am honest with myself, my answers to these questions are not what I’d like them to be. I know I should always keep Jesus at the center of my day-to-day life, but sometimes day-to-day life gets in the way. Does that ever happen to you? Perhaps the best thing I read in that reflection in the Little Black Book on March 2nd was the very last line. “Talk to him about it.” I think that is excellent advice.

On a separate note, I want to thank the Administration and Music Department at Hoosic Valley Central School for graciously re-scheduling the music concert that was scheduled for March 24, 2016, the night of Holy Thursday. On behalf of our parish I extend my heartfelt appreciation for your consideration. God bless.

Deacon Chris

Health Tips: The Zika Virus: What You Need to Know:

By now, most everyone has heard of Zika. And by now, most people have asked themselves – or their friends or doctors – how worried they should be about this fast-spreading virus. The short answer is that unless you're pregnant or plan to become pregnant, you don't need to be overly concerned about the Zika virus. Here's what you need to know: What it is: Zika is a tropical disease spread by bites from infected Aedes mosquitos and also, as recently reported in Dallas, by sexual transmission. Until May 2015, the virus was mostly limited to Africa, Southeast Asia and the Pacific Islands. But since then it's been reported in the Americas. The virus has even been reported in the U.S., mostly from travelers returning from affected areas but now also by someone who contracted Zika through sexual contact with a partner who had contracted the virus elsewhere. Why it's a big deal: Health officials warn that Zika is sure to become more prevalent in the U.S., since there are three easy ways for it to spread: (1) Picture an infected mosquito on an airplane headed our way; (2) Imagine an American Aedes mosquito biting an infected person (unfortunately, Aedes mosquitos already exist within the U.S.); and (3) Yes, again, sexual contact with an infected person. How it spreads: While the virus isn't usually spread person-to-person, sexual transmission has occurred and is possible. Mosquitoes pick up the virus by biting an infected person, and then those mosquitoes transmit it to someone else they bite later. Why the concern about pregnancy: If you are pregnant or plan to become pregnant, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevent (CDC) recommends that you not travel to Mexico, Puerto Rico and parts of the Caribbean, Central and South America where Zika is present. The reason everyone is so concerned about pregnant women is because the virus has recently been linked to birth defects (called microcephaly) in newborn babies in Brazil. What you can do: There is no vaccine or treatment yet, although a vaccine is in the works. In the meantime, the best thing you can do is to use precautionary measures, especially if you live in or are traveling to an area with the Zika virus. Take note that officials are predicting that Zika is likely to reach Puerto Rico first, followed by outbreaks in Florida, Gulf Coast states, and possibly Hawaii. To avoid mosquito bites, wear insect repellent that contains DEET when you go outdoors and covering exposed skin as best you can (wear long sleeves, long pants and socks). You also want to keep doors and windows closed unless you have screens, and do your best to prevent wet, moist areas in and around your home (they're breeding ground for mosquitos). And be sure you know where your sexual partners have been recently. What if you get it: The good news is that, with the exception of pregnant women, Zika isn't serious for most people. In fact, only one in five people develop symptoms, which typically show up between three and 12 days after exposure. When symptoms do appear (red eyes, rash, joint or muscle pain, headache and fever), they're typically mild, last about a week or less and, with rest and proper care, go away on their own. <http://www.clevelandclinicwellness.com>
