Second Sunday in Ordinary Time

The Mary of Scripture and the Mary of Devotions

There's an axiom that says: Roman Catholics tend to adore Mary while Protestants and Evangelicals tend to ignore Mary. Neither is ideal.

Mary, the Mother of Jesus, has, in effect, two histories within Christian tradition. We have the Mary of Scripture and we have the Mary of Devotions, and both offer something special for our Christian journey.

The Mary of Devotions is the more well-known, though mostly within Roman Catholic circles. This is the Mary invoked in the rosary, the Mary of popular shrines, the Sorrowful Mother of our litanies, the Mother with the soft heart through whom we can get the ear of God, the Mary of purity and chastity, the Mother who understands human suffering, the Mother who can soften the hearts of murderers, and the Mother we can always turn to.

And this Mary is pre-eminently the Mother of the poor. Karl Rahner once pointed out that when you look at all the apparitions of Mary that have been officially approved by the church you will notice that she has always appeared to a poor person—a child, an illiterate peasant, a group of children, someone without social standing. She's never appeared to a theologian in his study, to a pope, or to a millionaire banker. She's always been the person to whom the poor look. Marian devotion is a mysticism of the poor.

We see this, for example, very powerfully in the effect that Our Lady of Guadalupe has had on much of Latin America. In all of the Americas, most of the indigenous peoples are now Christian. However, in North America, while most of the indigenous peoples are Christian, Christianity itself is not seen as a native religion, but rather as a religion brought to the native peoples from elsewhere. In Latin America, in every place where Our Lady of Guadalupe is popular, Christianity is seen to be a native religion.

La María de la Escritura y la María de las devociones

Existe un axioma que dice: Los católicos romanos tienden a adorar a María, mientras que los protestantes y los evangélicos tienden a ignorar a María. Ninguna de las dos tendencias es la ideal.

María, la Madre de Jesús, tiene, en efecto, dos historias en la tradición cristiana. Tenemos la María de la Escritura y tenemos la María de las devociones, y ambas ofrecen algo especial a nuestro caminar cristiano.

La María de las devociones es la mejor conocida, si bien principalmente en los círculos católicos romanos. Esta es la María invocada en el rosario, la María de los santuarios populares, la Madre Dolorosa de nuestras letanías, la Madre con tierno corazón a través del cual podemos lograr que Dios nos oiga, la María de la pureza y la castidad, la Madre que entiende el sufrimiento humano, la Madre que puede ablandar los corazones de los asesinos y la Madre a la que siempre podemos volver.

Y esta María es preeminentemente la Madre de los pobres. Karl Rahner señaló una vez que si consideráis todas las apariciones de María que han sido aprobadas oficialmente por la iglesia, notaréis que siempre se ha aparecido a una persona pobre: a un niño, a un lugareño iletrado, a un grupo de niños, a alguien sin posición social. Nunca se ha aparecido a un teólogo en su estudio, a un papa ni a un banquero millonario. Ella ha sido siempre la persona a la que miran los pobres. La devoción mariana es un misticismo de los pobres.

Vemos esto muy poderosamente, por ejemplo, en el efecto que Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe ha tenido en gran parte de América Latina. En toda América, la mayor parte de los pueblos indígenas son ahora cristianos. Sin embargo, en Norteamérica, mientras la mayoría de los pueblos indígenas son cristianos, el Cristianismo mismo no es visto como una religión nativa, sino más bien como una religión traída de otros lugares a los pueblos nativos. En América Latina, en todos sitios donde Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe es popular, el Cristianismo se ve como una religión nativa.

But piety and devotions also run the risk of theological sloppiness and unhealthy sentimentality. That's the case too with the Mary of Devotions. We've tended to elevate Mary to divine status (which is simply wrong) and we have far too often encrusted her in so much piety that she, the Mary of Devotions, cannot possibly be the same person who wrote the Magnificat. The Mary of Devotions is often so enshrined in piety, over-simplicity, and asexuality that she needs to be protected from human complexity. Still, the Mary of Devotions offers us a lot vis-à-vis our spiritual journey.

Much more ignored is the Mary of Scripture and the role the various Gospels assign to her.

In the Synoptic Gospels, Mary is presented as a model of discipleship. More simply, she's shown to us as the one person who gets it right from the beginning. But that isn't immediately evident. On the surface, the opposite sometimes seems to be the case. For example, on a couple of occasions as Jesus is speaking to a crowd he is interrupted and told that his mother and his family are outside wanting to speak to him. His response: "Who are my mother and who are my brothers and sisters? It's those who hear the word of God and keep it." In saying this, Jesus isn't distancing his mother from himself and his message, the opposite. Before this incident is recorded in the Gospels, the evangelists have been very careful to point out that Mary was the first person to hear the word of God and keep it. What happens here is that Jesus singles out his mother first of all for her faith, not for her biology. In the Synoptic Gospels, Mary is the paradigm for discipleship. She's the first to hear the word of God and keep it.

John's Gospel gives her a different role. Here she's not the paradigm of discipleship (a role John gives to the Beloved disciple and to Mary Magdala) but is presented as Eve, the mother of humanity, and the mother of each of us. Interestingly, John never gives us Mary's name, in his Gospel she is always referred to as "the Mother of Jesus." And in this role she does two things:

First, she gives voice to human finitude, as she does at the wedding feast of Cana when she tells her son (who is always divine in John's Gospel) that "they have no wine." In John's Gospel, this is not just a conversation between Mary and Jesus; but also a conversation between the Mother of Humanity and God.

Second, as Eve, as universal mother, and as our mother, she stands in helplessness under human pain and within human pain when she stands under the cross. In this, she shows herself as universal mother but also as an example of how injustice must be handled, namely, by standing within it in a way that does not replicate its hatred and violence so as to give it back in kind.

Mary offers us a wonderful example, not to be adored or ignored.

Fr. Ron Rolheiser, OMI

Pero la piedad y las devociones también corren el riesgo de sensiblero carácter teológico y malsano sentimentalismo. Eso sucede también con la María de las devociones. Hemos tenido la tendencia a elevar a María al estatus divino (que es simplemente un error) y la hemos tenido fijada demasiado frecuentemente en tanta piedad, que ella, la María de las devociones, no puede resultar fácilmente la misma persona que expresó el Magnificat. La María de las devociones es frecuentemente guardada como recuerdo en piedad, super-simplicidad y asexualidad, que necesita ser protegida de la complejidad humana. No obstante, la María de las devociones nos ofrece mucho respecto a nuestro caminar espiritual.

Mucho más ignorada es la Madre de la Escritura y el papel que varios Evangelios le asignan.

En los Evangelios Sinópticos, María es presentada como modelo de discipulado. Más simplemente, nos es mostrada como la única persona que lo entiende bien desde el principio. Pero eso no es evidente de inmediato. Superficialmente, a veces parece que lo contrario es el caso. Por ejemplo, en un par de ocasiones, mientras Jesús está hablando a una multitud, se le interrumpe y se le dice que su madre y su familia están fuera esperándolo. Su respuesta: "Quién es mi madre y quiénes son mi hermanos? Aquellos que oyen la palabra de Dios y la cumplen". Al decir esto, Jesús no está distanciando de él y de su mensaje a su madre; más bien, lo contrario. Antes de que este incidente se relate en los Evangelios, los evangelistas han tenido buen cuidado de señalar que María fue la primera persona en oír la palabra de Dios y cumplirla. Lo que sucede aquí es que Jesús elige a su madre, antes que nada, por su fe, no por su biología. En los Evangelios Sinópticos, María es el paradigma para el discipulado. Es la primera persona en oír la palabra de Dios y cumplirla.

El Evangelio de Juan le da un papel diferente. Aquí, ella no es el paradigma del discipulado (un papel que Juan da al discípulo amado y a María Magdalena) sino es presentada como Eva, la madre de la humanidad y la madre de todos. Es interesante ver que Juan nunca nos da el nombre de María; en su Evangelio ella siempre es referida como "la Madre de Jesús". Y en este papel, ella hace dos cosas:

Primera, ella da voz a la limitación humana, como hace en la boda de Caná, cuando dice a su hijo (que es siempre divino en el Evangelio de Juan) que "no tienen vino". En el Evangelio de Juan, esto no es sólo una conversación entre María y Jesús, sino también una conversación entre la Madre de la Humanidad y Dios. Segunda, al igual que Eva, como madre universal y como madre nuestra, se mantiene de pie, en desamparo, sometida al dolor humano y cerca del dolor humano cuando permanece de pie bajo la cruz. En esto, se muestra así misma como madre universal, pero también como ejemplo de cómo debe manejarse la injusticia, es decir, permaneciendo dentro de ella de una manera que no replique su odio y violencia como para devolverla de la misma manera.

María nos ofrece un magnífico ejemplo, que no debe ser adorado ni ignorado.

Fire & Emergency Medical Service Lane / Linea de Fuego & Servicios de Emergencia

Please do not park cars on the emergency line at the side of the church. (This lane should only be used to drop off or pick up people.) Neither can cars be parked on the driveway leading to the back parking lot of the church. (This lane is only for cars to enter or exit the church parking lot) Please do not park your car there or leave it unattended, even for a few minutes. This not only hinders the safety of parishioners, it is also a violation of the fire safety code. In the event of an emergency, Fire Trucks and EMT's can not get through. Moving forward the police will be issuing tickets to cars parked in these places during Masses.

Por favor de no estacionar coches en la línea de emergencia al costado del templo. (Esta línea, es solo para que los coches puedan entrar o salir del estacionamiento de la iglesia) Por favor, no estaciones su coche allí o lo deje sin vigilancia, ni por unos pocos minutos. Esto no solo dificulta la seguridad de los feligreses, sino que también es una violación del código de la seguridad contra incendios. En caso de una emergencia, los Bomberos y la Ambulancia no pueden pasar. En adelante, la policía emitirá tickets a los autos estacionados en estos lugares durante las Misas.
