Advent Musings from Bishop McDermott

My dear family in Christ,

While on vacation in September I had the opportunity to play a round of golf with a member of the Diocesan Finance Council of the Diocese of Rochester. As we ate lunch following an enjoyable round of golf, he was sharing his joys of being a husband and a father. In the course of our conversation about his children he said something which has stuck with me to this day. He said that as a parent, “days are long and years are short.” He was reflecting upon those long days when children were sick or the family was experiencing difficulties, but that looking back over time, he noticed how quickly his children seemed to move from infancy to being in college. Perhaps this is just another way of describing the relativity of time, but I believe there is a truth contained in his comment that ties nicely to Advent and our call to prepare ourselves to welcome Christ.

As I look back on more than 36 years as a priest and now almost 18 months as a bishop, the long days I have experienced fade into the background when I think of how quickly the years have gone. I am sometimes shocked to meet the young men and women I baptized as infants talking about their own children now in college and beyond. I think of the college students I ministered to when I was pastor in Middlebury and realize these “Midd kids” are now in their late-40’s. As much as I like to think of myself as still being young, I realize I am now the same age as my father when I was ordained a priest and he retired from more than 30 years working for Texaco. The years are short.

On this first Sunday of Advent, and really for the first three weeks of the season, the readings and tone of the liturgies invite us to consider the return of Christ and whether we are prepared to stand before Him who will come “to judge the living and the dead.” We are being reminded that while we may experience long and difficult days in our lives due to any number of factors, these long days are moving us through the years quickly to the end of our lives on earth and preparing us to share eternity, we pray, with the Lord.

We are being challenged in these opening days of Advent to remember that our years and our lives are short in light of eternity, and we must accept the challenge now to prepare for the journey from this life to the next. We do this by striving to grow in our relationship with Jesus Christ daily, by deepening our life of prayer, by turning away from sin, by aiding those in need, in short, by heeding the words of Christ, “kingdom of heaven is at hand, repent and believe in the good news.”

While my reflection may seem more appropriate to Lent than Advent, I simply invite us all to not start the celebration of Christmas too quickly, but allow the first weeks of Advent to challenge us to remember that while our days may feel long, our years are short and Jesus Christ is returning. Are we truly ready?

God alone suffices,

+John J. McDermott
Bishop of Burlington
