From A Catechesis of Pope Francis on Old Age - 7 "Naomi, the alliance between the generations that opens up the future"

Today we will continue to reflect on the elderly, on grandparents, on old age – the word seems ugly but no, the elderly are great, they are beautiful! And today we will let ourselves be inspired by the splendid book of Ruth, a jewel of the Bible. The parable of Ruth sheds light on the beauty of family bonds: generated by the relationship of a couple, but which go beyond it. Bonds of love capable of being equally strong, in which the perfection of that polyhedron of fundamental affections that make up the family grammar of love shines. This grammar brings vital lymph and generative wisdom to the set of relationships that build up the community. With regard to the Cantic of Canticles, the Book of Ruth is like the other panel in the diptych of nuptial love. Just as important, just as essential, it indeed celebrates the power and the poetry that must inhabit the bonds of generation, kinship, devotion and fidelity that involve the entire family constellation. And which even become capable, in the dramatic conjunctures in the life of a couple, of bringing an unimaginable power of love, able to relaunch hope and the future. We know that clichés about the bonds of kinship created by marriage, especially that of the mother-in-law, the relationship between mother- and daughter-in-law, speak against this perspective. But, precisely for this reason, the word of God becomes precious. The inspiration of faith can open up a horizon of witness that counters the most common prejudices, a horizon that is precious for the entire human community. I invite you to rediscover the book of Ruth! Especially in the meditation on love and in catechesis on the family.

This short book also contains valuable teaching on the alliance of the generations: where youth reveals itself to be capable of restoring enthusiasm to mature age – this is essential: when youth restores enthusiasm to the elderly – and where old age discovers it is capable of reopening the future to wounded youth. At the beginning, the elderly Naomi, although moved by the affection of her daughters-in-law, widowed by her two sons, is pessimistic with regard to their destiny within a population that is not their own. She therefore affectionately encourages the young women to return to their families to rebuild their lives – these widows were young. She says, "I can do nothing for you". This already appears to be an act of love: the elderly woman, without a husband and without her sons, insists that her daughters-in-law abandon her. However, it is also a sort of resignation: there is no possible future for the foreign widows, without the protection of a husband. Ruth knows this, and resists this generous offer – she does not want to go home. The bond established between mother- and daughter-in-law was blessed by God: Naomi cannot ask to be abandoned. At first, Naomi appears more resigned than happy about this offer: perhaps she thinks that this strange bond will aggravate the risk for both of them. In some cases, the tendency of the elderly towards pessimism needs to be countered by the affectionate pressure of the young. Indeed, Naomi, moved by Ruth's devotion, will emerge from her pessimism and even take the initiative, opening up a new future for Ruth. She instructs and encourages Ruth, her son's widow, to win a new husband in Israel. Boaz, the candidate, shows his nobility, defending Ruth from the men in his employ. Unfortunately, this is a risk that still exists today.

Ruth's new marriage is celebrated and the worlds are again pacified. The women of Israel tell Naomi that Ruth, the foreigner, is worth "more than seven sons" and that the marriage will be a "blessing of the Lord". Naomi, who was full of bitterness and even said that her name was bitterness, in her old age, will know the joy of having a part in the generation of a new birth. Look how many "miracles" accompany the conversion of this elderly woman! She converts to the commitment of making herself available, with love, for the future of a generation wounded by loss and at risk of abandonment. The points of reconstruction are those that, on the basis of the probability drawn by commonplace prejudices, ought to generate insuperable fractures. Instead, faith and love enable them to be overcome: the mother-in-law overcomes her jealousy for her own son, loving Ruth's new bond; the women of Israel overcome their distrust of the foreigner; the vulnerability of the lone girl, faced with male power, is reconciled with a bond full of love and respect.

The mother-in-law is the mother of your husband, she is the mother of your wife. Let us think today about this rather widespread feeling that the farther away the mother-in-law is, the better. No! She is a mother, she is elderly. One of the most beautiful things about grandmothers is seeing the grandchildren – when their children have children of their own, they come alive again. Look closely at the relationship you have with your mothers-in-law: at times they are a bit special, but they have been the mother to your spouse, they have given you everything. We should at least make them happy, so that they go forth into their old age with joy. And if they have some fault, we should help them to correct it. And to you, mothers-in-law, I say: be careful with your tongue, because its misuse is one of the worst sins of mothers-in-law. Be careful.

Ruth accepts her mother-in-law and makes her come alive again, and the elderly Naomi takes the initiative of reopening the future for Ruth, instead of limiting herself to enjoying her support. If the young open themselves to gratitude for what they have received, and the elderly take the initiative of relaunching their future, nothing can stop the flourishing of God's blessings among peoples! Do not forget, may young people speak with their grandparents, may the young speak with the old, may the old speak with the young. This bridge must be rebuilt in a strong way – there is a current of salvation, of happiness there. May the Lord help us to grow in harmony with families, that constructive harmony that goes from the oldest to the youngest, that beautiful bridge that we must protect and safeguard.

PHÚC ÂM: Lc 14, 1. 7-14

"Hễ ai nhắc mình lên, sẽ phải hạ xuống, và ai hạ mình xuống, sẽ được nhắc lên".

Tin Mừng Chúa Giêsu Kitô theo Thánh Luca.

Khi ấy, nhằm một ngày Sabbat Chúa Giêsu vào nhà một thủ lãnh các người biệt phái để dùng bữa, và họ dò xét Người. Người nhận thấy cách những kẻ được mời, chọn chỗ nhất, nên nói với họ dụ ngôn này rằng:

"Khi có ai mời người dự tiệc cưới, người đừng ngồi vào chỗ nhất, kéo có người trọng hơn người cũng được mời dự tiệc với người, và chủ tiệc đã mời người và người ấy, đến nói với người rằng: 'Xin ông nhường chỗ cho người này'. Bấy giờ người sẽ phải xấu hổ đi ngồi vào chỗ rốt hết. Nhưng khi người được mời, hãy đi ngồi vào chỗ rốt hết, để khi người mời người đến, nói với người rằng: 'Hỡi bạn, xin mời bạn lên trên'. Bấy giờ người sẽ được danh dự trước mặt những người dự tiệc. Vì hễ ai nhắc mình lên, sẽ phải hạ xuống, và ai hạ mình xuống, sẽ được nhắc lên".

Rồi Người lại nói với kẻ đã mời Người rằng: "Khi ông dọn bữa ăn trưa hay tối, thì đừng mời bạn bè, anh em, bà con hay láng giềng giàu có, kéo đến lượt họ cũng mời ông, và như thế ông đã được trả lễ rồi. Nhưng khi làm tiệc, hãy mời những người nghèo khó tàn tật, què quặt, và đui mù; ông sẽ có phúc, bởi họ không có gì trả lễ. Vì ông sẽ được trả lễ khi những người công chính sống lại". Đó là lời Chúa.

Evangelio Lucas 14, 1. 7-14

En sábado, Jesús entró en casa de uno de los principales fariseos para comer y ellos lo estaban espiando. Notando que los convidados escogían los primeros puestos, les decía una parábola:

«Cuando te conviden a una boda, no te sientes en el puesto principal, no sea que hayan convidado a otro de más categoría que tú; y venga el que os convidó a ti y al otro, y te diga: “Cédele el puesto a este”.

Entonces, avergonzado, irás a ocupar el último puesto. Al revés, cuando te conviden, vete a sentarte en el último puesto, para que, cuando venga el que te convidó, te diga: “Amigo, sube más arriba”.

Entonces quedarás muy bien ante todos los comensales.

Porque todo el que se enaltece será humillado; y el que se humilla será enaltecido».

Y dijo al que lo había invitado:

«Cuando des una comida o una cena, no invites a tus amigos, ni a tus hermanos, ni a tus parientes, ni a los vecinos ricos; porque corresponderán invitándote, y quedarás pagado. Cuando des un banquete, invita a pobres, lisiados, cojos y ciegos; y serás bienaventurado, porque no pueden pagarte; te pagarán en la resurrección de los justos».
