At least 63 million lives aborted since 1973

This is Respect Life Month. The USCCB has set aside October to focus on pro-life issues for 50 years -- since Roe v. Wade made abortion legal in the United States.

After the decision to overturn Roe v. Wade, one Victoria man who regularly supports pro-life activities wanted to count the cost of legalized abortion in the U.S.

Robert Easterling, who also paid attention when business owners were saying, "Nobody wants to work," as they struggled to staff their restaurants, retail stores or other businesses, did some research and discovered that at least 63 million people died from abortion before they were born.

The country not only lost those persons, Easterling said, we lost their progeny. He doesn’t see it as a coincidence that there are not enough people willing to fill those open job positions. A retired businessman himself, he said as baby boomers age out of the workforce, the situation will become worse.

The number of reported abortions, according to Easterling, is about one-fifth of the current U.S. population and the loss of those people seems to mirror the

Catholic schools ‘a heck of a deal’

GANADO -- Maintaining a Catholic identity, school safety and transparency in the cost of education were discussed at a recent workshop for local school advisory council (LSAC) in the Diocese of Victoria. The workshop was hosted by the diocesan advisory council at Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary parish hall.

Bishop Brendan Cahill revealed to the group a recently adopted mission statement of the diocese that could guide the schools as well in their Catholic identity: “To be Christ-like people who work together to serve the Church so that every person encounters the love of Jesus.”

Attending Catholic schools becomes tradition in families, he said. “It is a sacrifice. It’s not easy, but they are committed to it because of their Catholic identity.”

The framework for having a strong Catholic identity in the schools, he said, comes straight from the Catechism of the Catholic Church.

“First,” Bishop Cahill said, “and it may sound obvious

We value life by seeing the one in need as ‘another self’

Depart Brothers and Sisters,

"Coming to topics which are practical and of some urgency, the council lays stress on respect for the human person: everybody should look upon his or her neighbor (without any exception) as another self, bearing in mind especially their neighbor’s life and the means needed for a dignified way of life, lest they follow the example of the rich man who ignored Lazarus, who was poor.” (Gaudium et spes #27)

The practical topics addressed at the conclusion of the Second Vatican Council in 1965 remain topics in our discussions about the Church and the world today: “marriage and the family, culture, economic and social life, politics, the solidarity of peoples, and peace.” (Gaudium et spes #46)

The Synod of Bishops, beginning in Rome this month, continues this discussion and offers voices from every part of the world in addressing the different issues. I think respect for the human person could be seen as the centralizing theme.

What actions are we as taking to help people live a dignified way of life? It could be bringing communion to the homebound or bringing food to someone in need. I can see many ways you are offering your time to help another person feel the respect and love of Jesus.

In this Respect Life Month, let me highlight three examples from our area:

The Gabriel Project of the Crossroads opened the Bethlehem Maternity Home in 2021. This special place provides a home for women who are experiencing difficult pregnancies. Respecting the value and beauty of every life, the men and women who serve at the Bethlehem Maternity Home offer love and respect. As I’m writing this, I realize they have a great need for more volunteers and help in the ministry – a result of the good news of their mission is the increased request for assistance from around the Crossroads.

Earlier this year, the Point Comfort Seafarers Center celebrated a new opening and blessing. In the few months that this center has been open inside the port at Point Comfort, many seafarers have come to find welcome and hospitality. Just like the Bethlehem Maternity Home, the ministry is growing and in need of more people to be able to spend some time at the center. The seafarers deeply appreciate the respect and care they receive from the people of this center.

The Kolbe Prison Ministries have been offering retreats and ministry in prisons across the state of Texas since 2009. In our diocese, they sponsor retreats to bring the love and mercy of Jesus to men incarcerated in the Stevenson Unit outside of Cuero. The ministry in this prison has extended to include weekly Mass, regular opportunities for sacramental confession, bible studies and RCIA. Right now we are looking into ways to reach out more to those incarcerated in county jails and juvenile detention centers. The men and women who have been bringing respect and love to the incarcerated also have grown in awareness and compassion for the pain so many victims of crime have suffered.

May God bless you and your families with peace and joy this month, and may we bring the respect and love of Jesus to every person we meet.

Let’s keep each other in prayer.

Diocese of Victoria’s 2023 Rosary Congress Oct. 1-8

The Annual Diocesan Rosary Congress will begin on Oct. 1. From that time and continuing for seven days, the rosary will be recited during Eucharistic adoration every hour somewhere in the diocese.

Each deanery is coordinating efforts to make sure that many parishes are involved in the prayerful intercession for our world and our families. Anyone who wants to participate should check with their church, or can visit the Parish Finder on the DOV website, www.victoriadiocese.org.

Nationally, many dioceses are participating in the Rosary Congress again this year. In union with the Eucharistic Revival, this year’s congress will focus on the spiritual power of Eucharistic Adoration and the rosary.

The movie “Power in My Hands” offers a beautiful testimony of our faith and is available for public showing. As part of this year’s Rosary Congress, Bishop Brendan J. Cahill will celebrate the Mass for our Diocesan Feast at the Cathedral of Our Lady of Victory on Saturday, Oct. 7 at 10 a.m.

Bishop Cahill has announced the 2023 intentions for our diocese:

1. in reparation for the sins of bishops and priests;
2. in reparation for sins against the Holy Eucharist, and for an increase and awareness of the real presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist;
3. for the gift of peace, especially in Ukraine; and
4. for an increase of vocations to the priesthood and consecrated life from our families.

More information on the national movement for the Rosary Congress can be found at www.rosarycongressusa.org.

Silent retreat focuses on All Saints, All Souls feasts

VICTORIA -- Amor Meus Spirituality Center is offering a fall retreat, “The Communion of Saints in Our Relationships,” Nov. 4 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. It will incorporate the Catholic holy days All Saints Day and All Souls Day, the two-day celebration of the Communion of Saints.

The retreat will dive into the questions: What exactly does this mean? What does it mean as people living our day-to-day lives? What is the invitation to which we are being beckoned? How do we perceive it, understand it and integrate it into our lives? Join us in exploring the answers.

Christina Guerra will be the spiritual director. She worked in state government for 30 years before she chose to become a Spiritual Director, completing her studies at the Center for Spiritual Development and the Contemplative Life in San Antonio and the Shalem Institute in Washington, D.C.

Even though I walk through the darkest valley, I fear no evil for you are with me your rod and your staff, they comfort me. Psalms 23:4
Respecting differences doesn’t diminish the truth

EDITORS NOTE: The following was written for the 26th Sunday in ordinary time, Cycle B. Father Kram titled it “Respect and Love for All.”

Years ago, German parents and Czech parents strongly opposed the inter-marriage of their children, sometimes even to the point of throwing them out of the family. City slickers and country folks ridiculed and looked down on one another. And, of course, an “other side of the tracks” attitude is not hard to find in almost any community.

And what about the rivalry between mankind and womankind – the feminist movement outside and inside the Church? For example, should women drive bulldozers? Should they be combat soldiers? Should they be ordained priests? Although we live in a country where we profess freedom and equality and fair play, and where everyone can express his opinion, the fact remains that we still tend to mistreat and belittle and disqualify those who are different from us.

Fortunately, through such things as women’s rights movements and peace movements and religious unity movements, harmony and cooperation have grown.

We have learned that we can each remain faithful to our heritage and to our innermost convictions and, at the same time, recognize whatever is true and good in others and find ways to cooperate and grow with them.

In many things, it would not be correct to say that it doesn’t matter what your principles are. This would imply that right is whatever we want or believe it to be.

For example, is drinking too much sinful or is it not? Does the pope have teaching authority in the Church or does he not? Does absolution by a priest in confession erase sin or does it not?

We are all either for or against the Lord. We must all strive after the truth to the best of our ability and to live honestly according to our conscience and to love and respect every fellow man, no matter how different he may be.

We must not say, “We are all equal but I am more equal than you.” But we might say, as one politician did, “I’d rather be right than president.”

A good way to decide how to act toward those who are different from us is to watch the Archie Bunker show and carefully note his attitude toward blacks, Jews, women and his son-in-law, and then do the opposite.

Lord Jesus, thank you for accepting into your kingdom people of so many different kinds. Help us to love and respect them all, and to tolerate the things in which we differ. Grant that we may continue to grow in cooperation and unity until we are all one in you. Amen.

Something for Everyone!
On Aug. 21 through Aug. 31, I was blessed to accompany Bishop Brendan Cahill on a pilgrimage to Mexico City. This trip was exactly a year after my pilgrimage to Rome after making my final vows.

For me, one of the highlights of the trip was being able to visit the church of the Sagrada Familia (Holy Family) where the relics of Blessed Miguel Pro are located. I have loved Blessed Miguel Pro for as long as I can remember. I don’t remember a time that I didn’t love this holy man who lived during the time of the Cristero War, when the Catholic religion was outlawed in Mexico. The churches were closed, people were being killed, priests and religious sisters were being exiled, imprisoned or killed. Yet, during this time, there was a young Jesuit that was determined to still bring the sacraments to people. He was known to dress up in disguises to avoid the police and arrive at people’s homes to celebrate the Mass or offer reconciliation.

He was a great man who, when finally captured, stared at the firing squad, outstretched his hands in the form of a cross (in his right hand he held a crucifix, in his left a rosary), and shouted, “Viva Cristo Rey! (Long live Christ the King!)” before being shot to death.

When it was time for his funeral, knowing that the churches were closed, all the people of the city of Mexico came out for the funeral. There were so many people in attendance that neither the police nor any government official dared to stop the funeral Mass or burial. They knew that they did not have the numbers to stop the riot that would have been incited had they tried to stop it.

On Aug. 29, our pilgrimage group was able to visit the church and the museum dedicated to Blessed Miguel Pro. Then we were given the honor of holding one of his relics. Bishop Cahill blessed the group with the relic, then the lady in charge of the museum called me forward to hold the relic so that our group members might touch their religious items to it, making them second-class relics.

Exactly one year ago that day I was running around Assisi trying to bring home a relic of Blessed Carlo Acutis for the Diocese of Victoria. It looked hopeless, but through the intercession of Blessed Carlo, who I told as I sat in front of him, “If you want to come back to Victoria, then you’re going to have to make it happen because it doesn’t look good,” I was able to bring him home. (I wrote about this event last year in the Lighthouse.)

This year, I was handed a relic of Blessed Miguel Pro who, like I keep repeating, I have loved for as long as I can remember so that our group could touch their medals and/or rosaries to it. It was a bone from a finger of his right hand. The hand he held the crucifix in when he was killed for being a priest.

Last year I had to jump through hoops and drag my sister and friends around, get told no, get yelled at, but still was blessed. This year the blessing was a surprise, it was gentle and such a gift. Last year and still today, I am learning about Blessed Carlo Acutis as I didn’t know much about him. This year, holding the relic was like greeting a friend, I literally felt as if I was holding his hand. I will carry that memory with me for the rest of my life.

The greatest blessing I was able to witness during this pilgrimage was Bishop Cahill celebrating Mass at the main altar of the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe. The petitions we had carried throughout the pilgrimage were placed in a designated area near the tilma, and then we saw our bishop celebrating Mass at the altar with only the deacon we brought with us. Bishop Cahill and all of us thought he was going to concelebrate the Mass, but he was the only celebrant. The people responded well to him, too, applauding when they heard where he was from and shouting that they loved him when Mass was done.

Amor Meus offers ‘Gift You Give Yourself’

VICTORIA -- Anyone who is a caregiver and in need of some spiritual nourishment is invited to join the workshop/retreat “The Gift You Give Yourself” on Oct. 21 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The retreat, hosted by the Amor Meus Spirituality Center at the Incarnate Word Convent, 1101 NE Water St., will be approached from the understanding that caregiving does not start with being busy or taking on tasks; rather, from a place of rest deep within the caregiver.

Before someone can give care that will bring comfort, rest and peace to others, they must know God’s rest and peace in their own hearts.

Deacon Leo Sharron, LPC, NCC, and Terry Robinson will be the facilitators. Deacon Sharron has served as director of clinical service at the Emmaus Counseling Center, and is Bereavement Services coordinator/chaplain for Hospice of South Texas.

Robinson, BS, University of Texas, Galveston, provides services to local rehabilitation hospitals, ministered in acute rehabilitation services for 17 years, was CEO of SCIC Hospital for eight years and was executive director of Hospice of South Texas for 15 years.

Sign in is at 9:30 a.m. Lunch will be provided. Attendees are asked to park in front of the convent.

There is no charge, but a free will offering will be accepted.

Sept. 15-Oct. 15 every year. I am so blessed to have visited Mexico City, the basilica, and Father Miguel Pro’s church before the month began as I have this whole month to meditate on that trip and see how much our God loves us. He loves us so much that He sent His only Son. The Son loves us so much that He sent His mother to bring an entire nation to Him. The Holy Spirit is still with us to give us the strength we need in the midst of adversity. Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us. Blessed Miguel Pro, pray for us.

“We ought to speak; shout out against injustices, with confidence and without fear. We proclaim the principles of the Church, the reign of love, without forgetting that it is also a reign of JUSTICE!” -- Blessed Miguel Pro

EDITOR’S NOTE: This is the last of a 10-part series about seeing climate change through a faith lens.

During the COVID pandemic, we discovered the wisdom that we are all connected. We see that we catch diseases as individuals who are part of families and families who are part of Churches, cities, states and nations. Our whole globe can be changed because of our interconnectedness.

Yet, other ills have been spreading and causing wider damage. While scientific and technological achievements have improved our human lives in the past 65 years, some have damaged our ecological systems –through our consumption, our use of natural resources and our waste.

The impact made on Earth’s natural systems has resulted in rapid, harmful environmental changes in the biosphere, which affects human lives. We must address this destruction of the planet and humanity, or it will continue to negatively impact future generations.

It is time to listen, rethink, pray, change and advocate. It is important to not just react, but to develop a way to spiritually look at what is happening in the world. It is important to find a peaceful place within ourselves while living in a fast-paced and changing world. This can help us to respond with more clarity and resilience. Through this more balanced approach of love and compassion within, we can be inspired to respond to the cries of the world in justice.

Love, care of creation and justice coincide. Since God is just, justice is the foundation of all religions. Our Judeo-Christian tradition is one among many other traditions who believe that God made a Covenant with our forbears to love and care for all, including the earth. Through them, we all agreed to love God, and each other. “This, remember, is the message you heard from the beginning: we should love one another.” (1 John 3:11)

If our actions in the environment hurt God’s creation, especially people of color and those in powerless neighborhoods, then there is a need to address the inequitable burden on them through environmental justice.

Together, we are called to recognize that our choices have impacted our environment, and we must change those choices. We each can choose to make personal changes by recycling, reducing our consumption and waste and using forms of energy other than petroleum energy.

However, large corporations and businesses that greatly impact the climate must make changes. Throughout the Bible, God calls us to be advocates for justice, to be the voice of those who do not have a voice. “Listen to what the Lord says: ‘Stand up, plead my case before the mountains; let the hills hear what you have to say. He has shown you, O mortal, what is good. And what does the Lord require of you? To act justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with your God.’” (Micah 6:1, 8)

This calls us to advocate for a clean atmosphere rid of harmful gases to reduce the temperature of the earth before 2050. Through the power and choice of advocacy, we can change the harm done for the benefit of all. We can help our neighbors half way around the world, ensuring that their needs and rights are taken seriously through policies, reversing the damage done to our atmosphere.

Often we shy away from advocacy. However, as members of civil society as well as of family and Church, our political leaders represent us. Through advocacy we inform them of our concerns, share our views, propose solutions, influence their thinking and encourage them in their commitments to represent all of us justly by formulating equitable policies to correct the devastation. We can do this through letters or in person.

We cannot be passive onlookers if we believe in a God of justice. We must be at the forefront, acting on what nature is telling us. If we believe in a God who created the universe and wants us to take care of it, we do not have another choice...

2023 Annual Catholic Conference
Father Juan Molina and Bishop Brendan Cahill, keynote speakers for the 35th Annual Catholic Conference in the Diocese of Victoria, offered conference talk focusing on God’s love for all people. More than 20 workshop presenters also provided a multitude of presentations on topics such as Eucharistic adoration, the Kerygma, family catechesis, sacramental preparation, scripture, Theology of the Body and more. Christella Alvarez, director of the Office of Catechetical Ministry, said she believes the day-long conference at St. Joseph High School in Victoria, demonstrated that the three key words of the Synod on Synodality – communion, participation and mission – bring us to the reality that we are one in the Lord.

Round-table discussions followed the workshops at the Annual Catholic Conference.

Bill Smith, right, of Loyola Press talks to people at his booth. He also was a workshop presenter at the conference.

Hermes Silva mans a booth for Kolbe Prison Ministry. He also presented one of the workshops.

decline in population of the 100 largest cities in the U.S. Of those 100 cities (New York being the largest and San Bernadino, Calif., in the 100th slot) there are 64,355,923 fewer people.

Of course no one but God could know the profundity of the loss, but Easterling hopes that sharing the data might be an eye-opener for the nation affected by the people who aren’t here.

“I thought the information was important,” Easterling said.

In a more personal way, being a father and grandfather, Easterling said he can’t imagine how people can see babies as anything less than whole persons who are wonderful to experience and watch as they grow.

Bishop Michael Burbidge, chairman of the USCCB’s Committee on Pro-Life Activities, called for “radical solidarity” with mothers in crisis through initiatives like “Walking with Moms in Need,” promoted by the USCCB. The program offers resources and how-tos for parishes so they can embrace the cause of helping women who might be considering abortion because they are impoverished or have other struggles.

“While we thank God that the terrible reign of Roe has ended, we also recognize that abortion still continues in most states and is aggressively promoted at the federal level. A great many prayers, sacrifices, and good works are still desperately needed to transform a culture of death into a culture of life. Our public witness, our marching, and our advocacy must continue, yet laws alone will not end the tragedy of abortion,” Bishop Burbidge stated.

The USCCB website www.respectlife.org/celebrate is promoting a nationwide novena Oct. 13-21 featuring daily pro-life intentions, reflections and suggestions for actions to help build a culture of life.

Another resource, one that helps explain many things about the pro-life position, is Healing the Culture. Camille Pauley, president of Healing the Culture, has created a video series called “Truth in 90 Seconds” that offers sound information for healthy pro-life debates. The series covers a variety of “what ifs” and “what abouts” that inevitably come up during pro-life discussions. Each segment is only 90 seconds.

People who want to get involved locally can participate in the Life Chain, scheduled for Oct. 1 this year in Victoria and many other locations around the diocese, and set for Oct. 29 in Port Lavaca. For more information on that, visit www.lifechain.net. And each year in January there is a Candlelight March for Life close to the anniversary of Roe v. Wade.

Hands-on help for mothers is accomplished through The Gabriel Project of the Crossroads. The organization trains volunteers to accompany mothers in crisis pregnancies and operates the Bethlehem Home for women who need a place to stay during a crisis pregnancy.

Those suffering the effects of abortion or who want to pray for the innocents who have died have a resource in Raphael’s Refuge in the Flatonia area. On Dec. 28, a special Mass to celebrate the Feast of the Innocents will take place. Visit www.raphaelsrefuge.org for more information on this healing mission.

Pink Lady, Honeycrisp, Red Delicious, Granny Smith, Gala, and many more varieties of apple; pears, peaches, nectarines, cherries, asparagus. These various forms of fresh produce are readily available every day in grocery stores across the country. As customers and consumers, we seldom stop long enough to consider how that takes place or who all may be involved. Let’s pause for a moment to ponder and give thanks for the bounty that surrounds us.

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops Subcommittee on Pastoral Care of Migrants, Refugees, and Travelers (PCMRT) recently organized and sponsored an episcopal encounter with migrant farmworkers in late August in the Diocese of Yakima, Wash., called “Christ in the Heart of the Migrant Farmworker Today.”

The goal for those of us who attended was to better understand how to support and promote ministry to migrant farmworkers in a way that is collaborative and conducive to integral development. The Diocese of Yakima, led by Bishop Joseph Tyson, offers a strong migrant ministry model, one that is centered on the gifts of communion and grace; of bringing the Gospel to life. It is all about the principle of subsidiarity in action; of social justice lived.

The attendees were of varied backgrounds, all involved in ministries and offices that seek to support migrants and their families. Bishops, priests, deacons and laity traveled from all over the country to Yakima -- from Ohio, Oregon, California and Texas; from Seattle and Chicago and San Antonio and Washington, D.C.; and Spokane and from Mexico. They represented the USCCB, the Catholic Migrant Farmworker Network, Justice for Immigrants (a Catholic national political group), and the Diocese of Yakima as well as other dioceses and groups.

The reality that is migrant farmworkers is nothing new and follow the pattern of all immigrants who simply want to work for a better life. These good people are vital and integral to the life and economy of this country. Their characteristics and desires are the same as they are for any of us -- strong families and communities, friendship and mutual support, inclusion and self-worth and a belief that the God of Life is accompanying them in their journey. The work to be done on their behalf is not about subject to object but subject to subject since we are all the same.

St. Pope John XXIII said, “The laborer deserves a just wage: this is what our Lord means in Matthew 10:10. A man’s work is sacred, because it is the work of a rational being, raised to the dignity of a son of God … What dignity and strength come to man from this divine purpose … Jesus, who came into this world to save mankind, spent most of his life as a workman … in ordinary manual labor.”

Certainly, the migrant farmworker is created in the image and likeness of God, deserving of all the inherent graces and blessings.

During this episcopal encounter, we were exposed to the details lived daily by those who would risk so much and work so hard. We heard presentations from those already involved in ministries that impact the migrant worker experience. We made site visits to migrant camps and farms, sharing moments of fellowship and the Eucharist. We had face-to-face conversations with migrant workers and their families, connecting and creating memories. We also shared within our group of participants how best to create a more holistic migrant farmworker ministry.

While unpleasant to accept, it was also so very necessary to be reminded about why this ministry outreach is so important. The needs being addressed include providing sacraments and faith formation wherever they are needed, leadership development and growing their cultural traditions. Sadly, however, this usually takes place without necessary resources, support or legal help and against prevailing social, political and economic prejudices.

These good people suffer through unfair recruitment processes, wage and hour abuses, health and safety risks, isolated or substandard living conditions and limited access to justice, not to mention the ever-present threat of deportation.

And yet they return, time after time, year after year, enduring annual six- to eight-month absences from their families in Mexico.

So why do they come? A better question, perhaps, is: How can they not?

Let me allow Fabian to explain.

Fabian was part of a panel discussion that we shared at the Fairbridge Inn and Convention Center. It is located in the heart of Yakima, a converted hotel complex that is now home to Fabian and so many of his friends and co-workers. This young man is in his late 20s or early 30s, well dressed and neatly kept. He seemed anxious to talk about the details of being away from home and family. He was welcoming and very appreciative of being noticed and encountered. The fact that he spoke almost no English and that my Spanish is very limited didn’t really matter.

These workers follow the growing and harvesting seasons, starting in California, then to Oregon, here in Washington at this time, then on to Idaho for potato season and back to California before leaving for Mexico. His day begins early, usually 4 a.m., and is very structured with considerable time constraints. Their work is quite physical, picking apples by hand while working off a ladder, and the days run long.

Their wages vary but are always tied to how many bins they fill in a day. Each bin holds about 300 pounds of apples, and the current compensation for him is around $4.50 per bin. He explained that if he can do this for at least five years, he can earn what it would take him 25 years to earn if he stayed in Mexico doing the same type of farm work.

Indeed, how can they not come?

They return to the Fairbridge each evening, where they generally stay for the rest of the day. They cannot easily or very readily dtry for the Diocese of Victoria, a trip to see those camps and the Catholic outreach for them was worth the time. They went at the invitation of the USCCB’s Subcommittee on Pastoral Care of Migrants, Refugees and Travelers and joined many others in similar ministries for the encounter with the migrants.

“We were able to see the migrant workers and the way they work, and to get a sense of what they experience,” Deacon Huse said, explaining that it gave him a good sense of what migrant life is all about.

The migrant workers, he said, have always been a presence, but the U.S. began to depend more on them during World War II when American farmers were sent to fight. As a deacon given to service, it was a chance to experience how other areas serve the vulnerable populations.

Camacho said, “For me it was reaffirming what we are doing here. There are a lot of migrants here in the diocese.” Some may work in agriculture, but others have visas to work in the plants or in other industries. Seafarers are also the kind of travelers for whom the ministry is designed to provide spiritual care.

Camacho said the migrants have faith, evident in the numbers who attended Mass at the event in Washington. “It was packed,” he said. “It’s about bringing the church to them and making them feel like they belong.”

“Ever since I’ve been involved with the different ministries with people on the move, I’ve appreciated how each ministry contributes to the Church,” said Bishop Brendan Cahill, who is the episcopal promoter for Stella Maris, the ministry for seafarers. “There is a widely diverse group of people. As bishop, I want you to know the church is providing the Eucharist and social services to circus workers, people who are seafarers, refugees and migrants.”

leave the premises to go into Yakima itself. It was obvious that Fabian accepted this reality and was committed to making the best of the situation.

That situation is made so much more palatable by Bishop Tyson, Father Jesus and other priests, and so many laity of the Diocese of Yakima. A combination of entities and individuals operate the Fairbridge, and the diocese only has access to it as a result of a relationship that has been developed over many years. A clarity of purpose and commitment to subsidiarity sustain their work today.

What the diocese offers Fabian and others is of great value, not just to the workers themselves but to all those who benefit from their presence here in Central Washington. We had the blessed opportunity to celebrate the Mass, offered on a regular basis, in a converted conference room at the Fairbridge. We shared Eucharist with about 75 workers, and their reverent reception of the Gift was humbling to witness.

Fabian also spoke highly of the classes that the diocese makes available, classes that range from music to choir to catechesis to various life skills. These offerings allow those who voluntarily participate the chance to work toward the best versions of themselves despite the daunting realities of their lives. He spoke in a more somber way as he lamented the documentation process. This necessary process by which they enter and remain in this country is complex and expensive. Trying to grasp and sort out things like DACA, H2As and H2Bs, R1s, blue cards and green cards only causes this listener to want to stand and applaud what the Diocese of Yakima is doing.

All of what we see and hear in the national level dialog is not an accurate representation of what happens at the local level. Most reasonable people can distinguish between drug trafficking and smuggling at the South Texas border and hardworking laborers in the Northwest who have hopes and dreams very similar to our own. So how do we play the hand we are dealt, the reality that is migrant farm labor that is critical to our way of life?

The answers are many and so complex, still being developed, but we must acknowledge and pray for the Diocese of Yakima. They are following a comprehensive plan that is designed to see to the rights and spiritual needs of migrant farmworkers in Central Washington. They indeed smell like their sheep.

We pray for committees, such as those with the USCCB and the Catholic Migrant Farmworker Network, as they pursue various improvements at the national and local level. We pray for and support Aldo Camacho in his efforts as the Director of Hispanic Ministry in our own Diocese. Individually, we can do our part by buying produce that originates in the Yakima Valley and never again complain about the price.

We pray that we can follow the direction that is given us in the Eucharistic Prayer for Various Needs III – “Keep us attentive to the needs of all that, sharing their grief and hope, we may faithfully bring them the good news of salvation and go forward with them along the way of your Kingdom.”

Pope Francis’ next environmental document to be called Laudate Deum

BY HANNAH BROCKHAUS
Catholic News Agency

The pope shared the name of his latest apostolic exhortation during a meeting with Latin American university rectors on Sept. 21, though the speech was only made public by Vatican News in Spanish on Monday afternoon.

According to Vatican News, while speaking about the environment and the “culture of abandonment,” Pope Francis revealed that his new document on the topic will be titled Laudate Deum, which means “Praise God” in Latin. It will be, he said, “a look at what has happened and say what needs to be done,” Vatican News reported.

In the same speech to 200 university personnel, Francis reflected on what he has termed a throwaway culture, saying it reveals “a lack of education to use the things that remain, to remake them, to replace them in the order of the common use of things.” He encouraged a “good use of nature,” including practical actions that can help the environment, such as the installation of solar panels. The pope also noted how environmental degradation could lead to another kind of “degradation,” namely, in how we treat others, especially those who are already living with fewer resources.

Pope Francis announced last month he would be releasing a follow-up document to the 2015 encyclical Laudato Si’. He later said it would be published on Oct. 4, the feast of St. Francis of Assisi. Oct. 4 is also the first day of a month-long assembly for the Synod on Synodality and the conclusion of the Season of Creation, a Vatican-supported ecumenical initiative about caring for the environment. Laudato Si’ is the second of three encyclicals published in Pope Francis’ pontificate thus far. It was released in June 2015. The theme of the encyclical, which means “Praise be to you,” is human ecology, a phrase first used by Pope Benedict XVI. The document addresses issues such as climate change, care for the environment, and the defense of human life and dignity. Pope Francis said Aug. 30 that the second part to Laudato Si’ would be the kind of papal document known as an “exhortation.” Francis has so far published five apostolic exhortations during his pontificate, including Evangelii Gaudium in 2013 and Amoris Laetitia in 2016. The feast of St. Francis of Assisi was also the date in 2020 that Pope Francis chose to release his most recent encyclical, Fratelli Tutti, about fraternity and social friendship.
When the storms come, we are called into them

At Your Service

By Deacon Michael Tankersley

“One day, when evening came, He said to them, “Let us cross over to the other side. Leaning the crowd, they took Him along with them in the boat, just as He was; and other boats were with Him. And there arose a fierce gale of wind, and the waves were breaking over the boat so much that the boat was already filling up.” (Mark 4:35-37)

The prospect of landing on “the other side” – in the unfamiliar land of the Gentiles -- was likely unsettling news for the apostles. Reports of demons and evil spirits have that effect. But their first trouble came not upon their arrival, but in the very act of crossing over.

Jonah had been thrust into a storm when he disobeyed God, but the apostles stepped into the boat in obedience and still there came a storm. Disciples, past and present, accept the reality that following Christ does not guarantee that storms will be absent, but in the promise that He is present.

Indeed, Jesus does not provide life hacks – was likely unsettling news for the tiles -- was likely unsettling news for the tiles. We are called into storms --storms of our own and those of others.

In my first year as a deacon, I was asked to baptize a newborn. Standing in the sanctuary awaiting another family and another newborn. I watched as the mother carried the infant down the aisle with her husband beside her. There was lightness in their steps and laughter in the hearts as they walked the aisle to bring themselves and their child to Christ.

Several weeks later, I stood in the same sanctuary awaiting another family and another newborn. I watched as the mother carried the infant down the aisle with her husband beside her … but there was no joy in the air. The mother did not carry her infant in her arms, she carried an urn. There was heaviness in their steps and sorrow in their hearts. Yet, in the midst of this “fierce gale of wind” they brought themselves and their child to Christ. The wounded family had stepped into the boat with the Wounded Healer to ride out the storm. Though the two families had walked the very same aisle, they walked differently -- one walked in sunshine, the other in a storm.

I have come to appreciate the “aisle” as something more than an access to and from our pews. I imagine it as the bridge by which people are trying to cross over to Christ and encounter the divine. It is a bridge that connects where we are to where we can be, and from who we are to who we can be. Jesus said “Come to me,” and we do. Each Mass we walk that bridge to Him and with Him, to consume Him and to be consumed by Him. But that walk, that bridge, is different for each of us. Some walk in sunshine, others in darkness seeking the light.

A college psychology professor of mine would often recite a snippet from a poem by Wallace Stevens:

“Twenty men crossing a bridge,
Into a village.
Are twenty men crossing twenty bridges,
Into twenty villages…”

I am mindful that each of us have our own bridges to cross, our own unique crosses to carry, our own storms to weather. Some who come forward to receive Christ in communion bear wounds that are fresh and raw and others come forward with the scars of hurts healed over. There is a woman who aches for a child she cannot have, and another who pains because she has a child but no husband … or job … or home. There is an elderly man concerned that he will soon be in need of full-time care and a caretaker who is drained of energy but filled with stress. Someone in line is in remission, another is in stage 4. This is where the newly wedded walk beside the newly widowed, and those with broken hearts stand by those with newfound loves. This is the aisle on which we walk with joy to weddings and with sorrow to funerals. And all are trying to cross over.

I have come to appreciate that I do not distribute communion to a crowd -- to just another body in a long line of bodies. Although we are “one body in Christ,” each body in that line is a unique person with his or her own rich life story, with their own frailties and strengths and their own victories and defeats.

Some are living the dream and others are living with disaster, and it is into those disasters, into those troubled lives, that I am called (as are you).

I could remind those in need of the Good News that Jesus isn’t asleep, and that He will calm the storm, and that He is present with them. But am I present to them? Am I being the good news for them or am I, like Cain, asking “Am I my brother’s keeper?”

Jesus said “Let us cross over to the other side.” This is not a calling for individual solo missions to salvation. This is us crossing over together to come to Our Father.

I once commented to a professor-priest as to the difficulty of preparing someone for the priesthood. Quite quickly he said that preparing a priest was easy, but developing the priesthood. Quite quickly he said that preparing someone for the priesthood was the real challenge. “It’s just like preparing you,” he said, “I can give you knowledge for your mind, and I can give you training for your hands. But I can’t give you an empathetic heart.”

My friends, we are our brother’s keeper. Whether it is an unacquainted body in the pew or a body on the street, he is our brother. When someone is struggling on their bridge, we can give them someone to hold onto. We can be a Simeon and help carry the cross of the fallen or a Veronica and wipe the bloodstained face of the hurt. We can be hands and feet, the eyes and empathetic heart of Jesus. We can help to calm the storms in the lives of others.

Have you heard about the National Eucharistic Congress? Hopefully, you have at least heard about the National Eucharistic Revival. This is an initiative that was called for by the bishops of the U.S. to encourage a rediscovery of the incredible gift of the Eucharist.

This multi-year effort of renewal is scheduled to culminate in a five-day event in Indianapolis, Ind., called the Eucharistic Congress. But what even is a Eucharistic Congress? The purpose of a Eucharistic Congress is understanding and worship; to increase one’s devotion and appreciation of the Eucharist.

The first Eucharistic Congress was inspired and organized by a French laywoman in Lille, France, in 1881. The theme was “The Eucharist Saves the World!” Since then there have been many hosted throughout the years – internationally, nationally and regionally. What is common to all Eucharistic congresses is the unity prayed for and expressed in the large communal celebrations of Mass and Eucharistic adoration. Much like a special diocesan Mass -- with the bishop, his priests and representatives of the whole diocese -- uniquely manifests the life of the local Church; a Eucharistic congress manifests the life of the broader Church in a common spirit of unity and charity.

In the United States there have been nine Eucharistic congresses. Between 1895 and 1911, Bishop Camillus Maes organized the first five. These were mostly gatherings of clergy that involved not only prayer, but also more academic presentations of scholarly papers on Eucharistic theology and practice, ending with a published resolution to summarize the reflections.

The next four Eucharistic congresses were organized by Bishop Joseph Schrems between 1930 and 1941 and were opened to laity. These grew to huge proportions, including tens of thousands of people. Eucharistic congresses were paused during World War II, but they never started again.

The 10th Eucharistic Congress, at the end of our Eucharistic Revival, will be the first one in more than 80 years.

What will happen at the Eucharistic Congress? Who can come? Taking place July 17-21, 2024, in Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis, this historic event is open to anyone. In fact, the organizers are hoping to completely fill up the stadium with 80,000 people. Each day will have a different theme and general keynote presentation with multiple breakout sessions and tracks for different groups. There is a track for those who are seeking a deeper encounter with Jesus and a track for those who are looking for strength and inspiration in their current volunteer efforts, as well as tracks for youth, families and those who are wondering about next steps after the revival.

The first day’s theme, “From the Four Corners,” will celebrate the arrival of pilgrims who will have been walking for months to the Congress from four parts of the United States. One group will actually be passing through our diocese in May.

The second day, “The Greatest Love Story,” will focus on the proclamation of the Gospel and invite participants to be intentional disciples of Jesus. The third day, “Into Gethsemane,” will be devoted to asking the Lord to pour out mercy and healing. The fourth day, “This is My Body,” will consider what it means to be a part of the Church and what we can do to live as committed disciples in relation to each other. The last day, “To the Ends of the Earth,” will send out the 80,000 Eucharistically renewed Christians as missionary disciples to share the Good News with everyone they meet.

Are you planning to attend the Eucharistic Congress? What kind of group do you want to take? Do you want to take a youth group? Do you want to go with just your immediate family? Are you a pastor who wants to take your staff for formation? Are you a leader in your parish who wants to start a young adult group? Do you want to go by yourself or with a small group of friends? In whatever ways you might attend, make sure not to miss this incredible opportunity.

El mensaje del Pastor

By Obispo Brendan Cahill

Queridos hermanos y hermanas,

“Al abordar temas prácticos y de cierta urgencia, el Consejo hace hincapié en el respeto a la persona humana: todos deben considerar a su prójimo (sin excepción) como otro yo, teniendo especialmente en cuenta la vida del prójimo y los medios necesario para una vida digna, no sea que sigan el ejemplo del hombre rico que ignoró a Lázaro, que era pobre”. (Gaudium et spes nº 27)

Los tempos prácticos abordados al concluir el Concilio Vaticano II en 1965 siguen siendo temas de nuestras discusiones sobre la Iglesia y el mundo de hoy: “el matrimonio y la familia, la cultura, la vida económica y social, la política, la solidaridad de los pueblos y la paz.” (Gaudium et spes nº 46)

El Sínodo de los Obispos, que comienza en Roma este mes, continúa esta discusión y ofrece voces de todas partes del mundo para abordar los diferentes temas. Creo que el respeto a la persona humana podría verse como el tema central.

¿Qué acciones estamos tomando para ayudar a las personas a vivir una forma de vida digna? Podría ser llevar la comunión a quienes están confinados en sus hogares o llevar comida a alguien que lo necesita. Puede ver muchas maneras en las que ofreces tu tiempo para ayudar a otra persona a sentir el respeto y el amor de Jesús.

En este Mes del Respeto a la Vida, permitanme resaltar tres ejemplos de nuestra área:

El Proyecto Gabriel de la Encrucijada inauguró la Casa de Maternidad Belén en 2021. Este lugar especial ofrece un hogar para mujeres que atraviesan embarazos difíciles. Respetando el valor y la belleza de cada vida, los hombres y mujeres que sirven en el Hogar de Maternidad Bethlehem ofrecen amor y respeto. Mientras escribo esto, me doy cuenta de que tienen una gran necesidad de más voluntarios y ayuda en el ministerio; un resultado de la buena noticia de su misión es el aumento de la solicitud de asistencia en todo Crossroads.

A principios de este año, el Point Comfort Seafarers Center celebró una nueva inauguración y bendición. En los pocos meses que este centro ha estado abierto dentro del puerto de Point Comfort, muchos marinos han venido en busca de bienvenida y hospitalidad. Al igual que la Casa de Maternidad Belén, el ministerio está creciendo y necesita más personas para poder pasar algún tiempo en el centro. Los marinos aprecian profundamente el respeto y la atención que reciben de la gente de este centro.

Los Ministerios Penitenciarios Kolbe han estado ofreciendo retiros y ministerio en prisiones de todo el estado de Texas desde 2009. En nuestra diócesis, patrocinan retiros para llevar el amor y la misericordia de Jesús a los hombres encarcelados en la Unidad Stevenson en las afueras de Cuero. El ministerio en esta prisión se ha ampliado para incluir misa semanal, oportunidades regulares para la confesión sacramental, estudios bíblicos y RICA. En este momento estamos buscando formas de llegar más a los encarcelados en cárceles del condado y centros de detención juvenil. Los hombres y mujeres que han estado brindando respeto y amor a los encarcelados también han crecido en conciencia y compasión por el dolor que han sufrido tantas víctimas del crimen.

Que Dios los bendiga a ustedes y a sus familias con paz y alegría este mes, y que podamos llevar el respeto y el amor de Jesús a cada persona que conozcamos.

Mantengámonos unos a otros en oración. +Brendan

2da Conferencia Hispana un gran éxito

"Valoramos la vida viendo al necesitado como ‘otro yo’."

Queremos que los frutos de esta conferencia sean muchos, que la gente se inspire a vivir una Cultura Eucarística en sus comunidades la cual llame a la misión a compartir el amor y la misericordia de Dios con los más necesitados.

Los invito también a seguir atentos de nuestra pagina web www.victoriadiocese.org/retiro-espiritual-2023 donde estaremos dando a conocer eventos diocesanos como el próximo retiro espiritual de meditación y silencio a cargo del Padre Robert Moreno Jr. de la Diócesis de Brownsville en las afueras de Cuero. El ministerio en esta prisión se ha ampliado para incluir misa semanal, oportunidades regulares para la confesión sacramental, estudios bíblicos y RICA.

Quiero darle el más profundo agradecimiento a todos los voluntarios por su generosidad y amor. Que Dios los bendiga a ustedes y a sus familias con paz y alegría este mes, y que podamos llevar el respeto y el amor de Jesús a cada persona que conozcamos.

Feast of St. Francis of Assisi, Oct. 4

Many people bring their pets to the church to be blessed on St. Francis’ feast day because of his love for animals as expressed in his Canticle of Creatures. You can pray for and bless your pets and animals at home too. A verbal blessing and a sprinkling holy water can be offered in your backyard, garden or anywhere inside your home.

The following Pet Blessing can be used:
Blessed are you, Lord God, maker of all living creatures.

You called forth fish in the sea, birds in the air, and animals on the land.
You inspired St. Francis to call all of them his brothers and sisters.
We ask you to bless this pet.
By the power of your love, enable it to live according to your plan.
May we always praise you for all your beauty in creation.
Blessed are you, Lord our God, in all your creatures!
Amen.

30TH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

GOSPEL – MATTHEW 22:34-40

A reading from the holy Gospel according to Matthew. When the Pharisees heard that Jesus had silenced the Sadducees, they gathered together and one of them, a scholar of the law tested him by asking, “Teacher, which commandment in the law is the greatest?” He said to him, “You shall love the Lord, your God, with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind; this is the greatest and the first commandment. And you shall love your neighbor as yourself. The whole law and the prophets depend on these two commandments.”

A Prayer in Autumn
for Country Living

GOOD and generous Lord, You have once more brought the year full circle, through planting and growing and ripening to harvest time, and autumn.

We thank You for the sun and the wind, the rain and the dew, the minerals of the earth and all the plants that grow and all the beasts and birds of farm and field. We marvel at Your wonderful ways of bringing food from the earth for man’s good.

Dear God, help us to use Your rich gifts as You want us to. Teach us to share them with our neighbor when he is in need. Make us see, in the marvelous succession of seasons, and in the growth and ripening of our crops, the merciful, generous hand of Your divine providence.

Help us to realize, too, that if we keep Your commandments and live according to the inspirations of Your grace, we shall also reap a plentiful harvest in the autumn of our lifetime: a harvest that we will be able to enjoy for ever and ever, where no rust can destroy, nor blight spoil any least part of it.

Amen.

Pope warns against ‘playing with life’

DANIEL IBANEZ
Catholic News Agency

Pope Francis condemned euthanasia and abortion as actions that “play with life” and said there is such a thing as “bad compassion” during a press conference aboard the papal plane from Marseille to Rome on Saturday.

“You don’t play with life, neither at the beginning nor at the end. It is not played with!” he told journalists Sept. 23, as he returned from a two-day trip to Marseille, in southern France, to speak at a meeting of young people and bishops called Mediterranea Encounter.

“Whether it is the law not to let the child grow in the mother’s womb or the law of euthanasia in disease and old age,” he said, “I am not saying it is a faith thing, but it is a human thing: There is bad compassion.”

Aboard the plane, a French journalist asked Pope Francis whether he had spoken about euthanasia in his private conversation with France’s President Emmanuel Macron earlier in the day. The French government is currently preparing to pass a controversial bill on end-of-life issues that could legalize assisted suicide and euthanasia in the country.

The pope said he did not address the topic of euthanasia with Macron on Saturday but that he had expressed himself “clearly” on the issue when the French president visited him at the Vatican last year.

Macron, who made changing the end-of-life framework one of his campaign promises, declared his “penchant” for the Belgian model in April 2022. Pope Francis said it is not just an opinion that life should be safeguarded and warned that it is easy to fall into an idea that pain should always be prevented, even through what some might consider a “humanistic euthanasia.” Instead, science has made great strides in helping you take away all the pain, and euthanasia is one of these things ... gentle death, selection before birth ...” Pope Francis has condemned euthanasia throughout his papacy, including referring to it as “a sin against God.”

On the feast of our Lady of Fátima on May 13, the pope expressed his sorrow over the legalization of euthanasia in Portugal, which he called “a law to kill.” He has also been firm about the need to provide the very ill and dying with palliative care, which seeks to improve the quality of life of people suffering from severe illnesses. “We must accompany people towards death but not provoke death or facilitate assisted suicide,” he said in 2022.

Ashley Novosad gives a presentation on the actual cost of educating students at Catholic schools in the Diocesan of Victoria during a workshop for all local school advisory committees in the diocese. (Janet Jones/The Catholic Lighthouse) to us: God is the Creator and the creation is good.” Though evil can sometimes make us believe otherwise, he said, it is the first thing the Bible teaches and the first thing children learn.

“Students are gifts to be treasured, not problems to be solved,” he said. “Our schools should see the beauty of children.”

The Catechism also talks about the sacraments. Bishop Cahill told the group that, through a sacramental life — going to Communion and reconciliation — people experience mercy and, therefore, will become more merciful and compassionate.

Life in the Holy Spirit is also learned through the Catechism. That means living a moral code, which is provided in the 10 Commandments, and teaching that moral code in school.

“The final section is about prayer: What does it look like at a Catholic School? And this is what I get to see,” Bishop Cahill said. “I get to celebrate Mass. … And those kids pray.”

Dr. John Quary, superintendent of Catholic Schools for the Diocese of Victoria, addressed school safety, calling it “one of our most critical aspects of our educational journey. He said children should “learn, grow and thrive without fear.”

He said security is not only for students’ physical well being but also their mental and emotional security. He stressed keeping doors locked, using the Raptor system religiously and “being aware of what is going on around us.” The Raptor system is used to check in visitors using their drivers’ licenses. It is connected to a sex offender database and will alert school personnel if there are any matches.

Ashley Novosad, an LSAC member for Nazareth Academy, offered a presentation showing the actual cost of education (ACE). She and NA teacher Amy Alegira gathered the data as a graduate student project. They are in a partnership program between the diocese and the University of Houston-Victoria to receive master’s degree in educational leadership.

They found that each year, the average cost of educating children of Catholic schools in the diocese is $8,600. For public schools in the area, that average cost is $12,000. All told, she said the DOV’s Catholic schools save taxpayers about $39 million every year.

“Obviously it is much less costly to have a child in a Catholic school than a public school,” Novosad said. “The money largely goes to teachers’ salaries and other regular operating costs.

What parents actually pay is less than the actual cost. Sometimes almost half. Novosad said there are gaps as great as $5,200 per child per year in some schools, which is why fundraising is so important in Catholic schools.

“We have an incredible product and a heck of a deal,” Novosad said. Sharing that information with parents, hopefully, will inspire them to volunteer more and understand the importance of fund-raisers.

“I think parents want to know, and I think they’d be surprised to know,” Novosad said. She said she thought what she was paying was expensive until she realized the cost versus the value of Catholic education.

Marketing and promoting the schools is also important, she said. Many schools could decrease their cost per student simply by having more students in the classroom. In some instances the cost per student could be cut almost in half if the school enrollment was at capacity.
