From the Pastor's Desk...

At the turn of the century, there were many predictions that the U.S. Catholic experience would increasingly become more Hispanic. These predictions have not only materialized but also accelerated. Nearly half of all Catholics in the U.S. (about 45 percent) are Hispanic. When you look at Catholics under the age of 30 more than half self-identify as Hispanic. As this trend marches forward, in many parts of the U.S., ministry with Hispanic Catholics is simply Catholic ministry.

During the last 25 years, what church leaders call Hispanic ministry has evolved significantly, thanks to demographic and cultural changes. By the middle of the 1990's, most Hispanic people in the U.S. were immigrants. Today, more than two-thirds of all Hispanics are U.S.-born (68 percent). They are mainly English-speaking, although most also communicate comfortably in Spanish. Culturally, they are American and Hispanic. Politically, they are discerning citizens in a polarized nation. The ratio of immigrants to U.S.-born among Hispanic Catholics is about 50/50.

Pastoral leaders doing Hispanic ministry are much more conscious of the urgency to better accompany, form, and serve the fastest growing sector of the Catholic community – i.e., second and third generations of young Hispanics. These are the children and grandchildren of immigrants from Latin America and the Spanish-speaking Caribbean. This has not been an easy task, and many young Hispanics have simply stopped self-identifying as Catholic. Hispanic ministry leaders are recalibrating their approaches to be more intentional about accompanying these younger, mostly U.S.-born generations of Catholics.

As the Hispanic Catholic population grows swiftly, the overall Catholic ministerial infrastructure in the country is experiencing contraction. There have never been more school-age Catholic children in the country as there are today – most of them Hispanic – but we have closed more than half of our Catholic schools. As millions of Hispanics seek faith communities in which to worship and grow in their faith, some dioceses are closing their parishes, many of them with Hispanic ministry, while others do not have resources to build new ones.

I mention all of this, not only to point out a great challenge facing the Catholic Church in the U.S., but also a tremendous opportunity. We must be both aware of the challenge and look for ways to embrace this wonderful opportunity. It is not too late to turn things around. Many ministerial organizations have sprung up throughout our country up to embrace this opportunity. I share the excitement of these organizations and look forward to journeying with them. We live in a new moment, un Nuevo Momento.

Peace be with you, Fr. Bob Jones
