Little Flower Catholic High School for Girls

To the Little Flower Community,

I graduated from Saint Joseph's University in May of 2008. I wanted to be a teacher in a high school in Philadelphia, and I wanted to continue my passion in sports journalism. My parents wanted me to have a job with benefits, and they wanted me safe and happy. When I graduated, the recession was impacting the job market and major print media industries like newspapers. I sent out many resumes and interviewed many times. I remember calling my mother in an elevator after a terrible interview and feeling completely defeated.

Yet, I started my teaching career in the fall of 2008 at West Philadelphia High School in the Auto-mechanic building teaching English and moderating an after-school program in STEM education for hybrid technology, Philly Hybrid X. It was a difficult and wonderful first year of teaching. And the Phillies were in the World Series playing the Tampa Bay Rays. I so remember these games! I went to these games! I remember Cole Hamel's pitches, Chase Utley's defensive plays, and "The Flyin Hawaiian" stolen bases. It was such an iconic time for the city of Philadelphia. I remember the rain; so much rain. Last night's game against the San Diego Padres was a continuous microcosm of what it means to be a Phillies fan. Did you notice it was pouring when the Seranthony Dominguez was on the mound, but it stopped raining when the Phillies were hitting? I am very excited to share this victory, this moment with our students and school community as the Philadelphia Phillies continue their quest for a World Series Championship. Go Phils.

Have a safe and blessed week,
Kathleen Thérèse Radebaugh
