MESSAGE FROM OUR PASTOR

Reverend Steven Pautler

Palms in the Attic, Prayers in the Heart

Each year as Palm Sunday approaches, I'm brought back to one of those simple but sacred memories—receiving palms at church. As a kid, I always felt like I was handed something holy, something ancient. And I suppose I was.

In 1970, when I was ten, I helped my dad, uncle, and brother clean out the old farmhouse that belonged to Grandpa Lawrence and Grandma Gertrude. Grandpa had just passed, and Grandma had been gone since 1959—just before I was born. As we climbed into the attic, tucked into a quiet corner was a cedar box filled with what had to be hundreds of palms. Brittle, dry, aged by time—but clearly treasured. Grandma had saved them, year after year. They weren't just leaves. They were memories. They were prayers.

And just this past summer, I found myself doing something similar at my parents' house. Sure enough—Mom had her own palms, many of them lovingly folded into crosses. I imagine both of them—Grandma and Mom—holding those palms during the reading of the Passion, back when it was read in Latin, or quietly reading the passion narrative. Maybe Grandpa drove them home afterward, the palms resting quietly in their laps. Maybe they thought, like I do now, about Simon of Cyrene helping Jesus carry the cross, or the good thief who, in the very last moment, asked Jesus to remember him.

It's funny how something so fragile can hold so much strength. Those little branches remind us that even when life feels brittle or broken, we're part of a much bigger story. The palms that we hold today are blessed with the same words and prayers as those held generations ago. In a world that changes so quickly, it's comforting to know that some things—like the love of Jesus and the hope of Easter—stay steady and sure.

I wonder sometimes if Grandma knew, tucking those palms into her cedar box, that they would speak decades later. Not in words, but in whispers of faith. I like to think she smiled in heaven when I found them. I like to think Mom does too. Maybe that's what we're doing when we pass down these traditions—not just handing on a ritual, but sharing a piece of heaven's joy.

These are more than traditions. They're part of the great tapestry of Holy Week. So this year, as you receive your palm, hold it with joy. Remember someone who once did the same. Display it, cherish it, pray with it. And let it lead you gently toward Easter morning—with memory, with love, and with a smile.

And maybe—just maybe—tuck one away somewhere special. Years from now, someone might find it. And in that moment, they'll not only remember you, but also the love and faith that shaped your life—just as Jesus shaped His final days for love of us all.

Because that's what these palms really are—they're quiet witnesses. They don't shout or sparkle, but they stand as gentle reminders that faith is passed on not only in great sermons or dramatic moments, but in small, consistent acts of love: a child watching their parent hang a palm behind the crucifix, a grandparent folding one into a cross, a family bowing their heads during the reading of the Passion. These are the holy echoes that shape our hearts—and they just might be the most powerful sermons of all.

First in School History: Charlie's Christmas Art Wins Big!

Charlie, a bright and talented student at SMS, made school history by becoming the first student from St. Mary School to place at the state level in the Keep Christ in Christmas poster contest — a program sponsored by the Illinois State Knights of Columbus. Charlie's beautiful artwork earned 3rd place in the entire state, a remarkable achievement that filled his school, teachers, classmates, and family with pride.

The Keep Christ in Christmas contest encourages students to express the true meaning of the holiday season through art. Charlie's thoughtful and creative poster stood out among many entries across Illinois, showing not only his artistic ability but also his understanding of the spiritual message behind Christmas.

To celebrate Charlie's success, his entire class joined in the fun with a special party — complete with pizza and cake! Smiles, laughter, and a little frosting made it a day to remember. "His accomplishment is a shining example of how faith and creativity come together at SMS."
