Breaking Open God's Word:

Second Sunday of Easter (Divine Mercy Sunday)

The first two readings go hand in hand in describing the experience of the early church. The first three words of the first reading are key: "They devoted themselves" (Acts 2:42). Members of the early church were nothing if not devoted. They devoted themselves to learning from the apostles, to living communally with other Christians (the word they'd started using to describe their identity), to prayer, to worship, and to the Eucharist. They also devoted themselves to making sure that everything they had was divided equitably among them so that no one was in need, to meeting together to share and strengthen their faith, to eating together as Jesus had with the apostles, and to growing in number. The second reading hints at the persecution they faced. But they were able to endure the trials they suffered because of their faith: a certainty of their salvation, which they called "a living hope . . . to an inheritance that is imperishable, undefiled, and unfading" (1 Peter 1:3-4). No wonder they experienced "an indescribable and glorious joy" (1 Peter 1:8).

Prayers:

"All who believed were together and had all things in common; they would sell their property and possessions and divide them all according to each one's need." Acts 2:44-45

The early church practiced the purest form of stewardship. Their generosity was a realization that all they had belonged to God and it was entrusted to them for the sake of others.
