REFLECTION

What we have in the Ten Commandments is not an arbitrary set of rules imposed from outside that restrict us, or take away all that seems to delight, but an owner's manual for being a person. The ten Commandments tell me the truth of who I am. They don't simply tell me what I must do – or mustn't do – but in telling me that, they tell me who I am, and what is the world in which I live. They tell me the truth; that I, and the world in which I live, are where the holiness of God is made visible, where the Holy is to be found.

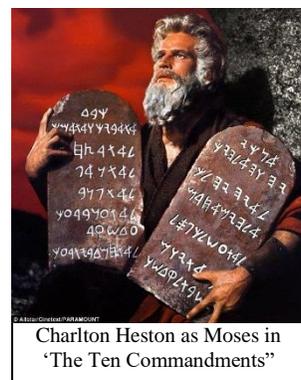

For millennia, people have looked for the Holy in special places. For the Jews, the Temple was the place of the Holy: "Praise God in his holy place!" sings the psalmist. So, the words of Jesus in today's gospel were not just shocking but unbelievable: destroy this temple? Not only has it continued being rebuilt for the past 46 years, but it is the Temple – it is where the Holy is to be found. Even in the time of the Temple, God's first people knew that all of life was holy, but the Temple was the Temple: this was where the Shekinah, the glory of the presence of God, was to be found. To speak of it being destroyed wasn't so much the equivalent of suggesting taking a bulldozer to St Peter's as of suggesting we should do away with the Mass.

But we need to remind ourselves, as the Jews needed to remind themselves, that it was not until the time of King David that the first temple was built: for most of the defining moments of the history of God's people, there was no one special place as such where God was to be found, and the Commandments spelt out that all of life was a place for the Holy to be found and celebrated. There was not one dimension which was the Holy and one which was the everyday: God's revelation was of God as Emmanuel – God in the midst of us.

Judaism is full of blessings – thanksgivings for each moment of the day - just as it is full of commandments for each moment of the day, because each moment of the day is holy, because in each and every moment of the day (including some moments that we really might not think of as linked with holiness) the Holiness of God is there to be met.

John's Gospel is put together after the destruction of the temple in the year 70 of our common era and was addressed to a community that had broken its links with Judaism. John in his Gospel was telling us not something that disagreed with or refuted what the rabbis were teaching about the Holy being present in the everyday, but something that went beyond it: "but Jesus was speaking of the sanctuary that was his body." For John, as for all the Gospel writers, the Gospel itself was that Jesus is the Holy One: Jesus is God's holiness in our midst, Jesus is God's presence in our midst.
