Reading I: Acts of the Apostles: 2:42-47: Christian tradition and almost all commentators assert that the book of the Acts of the Apostles was written by the author of the Third Gospel and that the author of both was St. Luke, the companion of St. Paul on his second journey and his loyal aide. The Church has always maintained that the Acts of the Apostles is a true history of events. Acts is a sort of compendium of the Christian faith in action. St. Luke's purpose was to instruct so he presented all the main truths of the Christian faith and in so doing shows the main outlines of the liturgical and sacramental life of the early Church. The readings for this second Sunday of Easter provide a focus on the early Christians, with a special focus to two virtues in particular: perseverance and fellowship. The apostles spent considerable time and effort in teaching the faith to their disciples. The teaching to those in the Church is known as catechesis. The fellowship referred to in this verse is that union of hearts brought about by the Holy Spirit and the "breaking of bread" refers to the Holy Eucharist. The awe mentioned in the next verse is the amazement and wonder the disciples felt when they saw the miracles and other supernatural signs which the Lord worked through His apostles. Charity and union of hearts lead the disciples to sacrifice their own interests to meet the material needs of their poorer brothers and sisters. The sharing of possessions referred to here was a not a permanent socialistic kind of system. Rather, it was the more well-to-do Christians freely providing for those in need.

Responsorial Psalm: Psalm 118: 2-4, 13-15, 22-24 (1): The refrain with which the psalm opens is a standard thanksgiving formula and is a call to the people to join in thanksgiving and to trust in the Lord. Verse 14 reproduces part of the canticle of Moses after the crossing of the Red Sea showing that God continues to be the Savior of His people. The reference to the "right hand of the Lord" points to His power to give victory to His followers. In their acclamation the people acknowledge that God has established a new order through the victory won by the king. The king is compared to a rejected stone that has been made into the keystone of an arch which keeps the whole structure together. He was rejected by those who attacked him but now he rules over them. We hear parts of verses 22-24 spoken by Christ in the parable of the murderous tenants whose vineyard is taken from them and given to others (Mt. 21:42; Mk 12:10; Lk 20:17). The Church uses this psalm in the liturgy of Easter Sunday and often repeats in Easter Week the words of verse 24, acknowledging that a new order of salvation has been established by the resurrection of Christ.

Reading II: 1 Peter 1: 3-9: Our second reading was authored by St. Peter. Scripture scholars believe that examination of the content of the letter supports its Petrine origin. There are very obvious similarities between the teaching contained in it and the discourses of St. Peter recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. The main purpose of the letter seemingly was to console and exhort Christians to stand firm in the midst of difficulties. The reading opens with a hymn of praise and gratitude to God for He has destined us to a marvelous heritage in heaven. God brought about the work of our redemption by "His great mercy". This is our heritage. For those Christians who stay true to their calling, this inheritance, St. Peter says, is kept in heaven. Hope of obtaining the inheritance of heaven gives Christians joy in the midst of trials which test their faith. At the center of that faith is Jesus whom we strive to love above all, thereby attaining what St. Peter calls "unutterable and exalted joy": a foretaste of the joy of heaven itself. Exhortations to be joyful in the mist of affliction occur often in the New Testament and reflect a deep Christian conviction. St. Bede, in a commentary on this passage, says that St. Peter teaches that it is good to suffer trials because eternal joys cannot be obtained except through the afflictions and sorrows of this passing world. When one receives an eternal reward, the afflictions of this world which seemed so heavy and bitter seem then (in hindsight) to have been very short lived and slight. Picking up this theme from both St. Peter and St. Bede, St. Josemaria Escriva wrote that Christian joy is the product of faith, hope, and love. Continued on next page...

Continued from previous page... “You should realize that God wants us to be happy and that, if you do all you can, you will be happy, very, very, happy, although you will never be a moment without the Cross. But that Cross is no longer a gallows. It is the throne from which Christ reigns”. We often reflect this advice when we exhort others (and ourselves) to “offer it up” when hardship is encountered.

Gospel: John 20:19-31: Jesus appears to the apostles on the evening of the day on which He rose from the dead. He presents Himself without any need for the doors to be opened which would be proper to the qualities of His glorified body. Yet, He didn’t want the apostles to think He was only a spirit so He shows them His hands, feet, and side: there is no longer any doubt of its being Jesus Himself or about His being truly raised from the dead. However, St. Thomas was not with the rest of the apostles when Jesus appeared to them the evening of the resurrection. The apostles related to Thomas that they had seen the risen Lord and he refused to believe it unless he saw for himself and probed the wounds. Thomas’ doubting moves Jesus to give him special proof that His risen body is quite real. By so doing He bolsters the faith of those who would later on find faith in Him. Addressing this passage, St. Pope Gregory the Great wrote: “Surely you do not think that it was a pure accident that this disciple was missing; who on his return was told about the appearance and on hearing about it doubted; doubting, so that he might touch and believe by touching? It was not an accident; God arranged that it should happen. His clemency acted in this wonderful way so that through the doubting disciple touching the wounds in his Master’s body, our own wounds of incredulity might be healed. And so the disciple, doubting and touching, was changed into a witness of the truth and of the resurrection”. Thomas’ reply is not simply an exclamation: it is an assertion, and act of faith in the divinity of Christ: “My Lord and my God!” These words have become a prayer often used by Christians, especially in the real presence of Christ in the Blessed Eucharist. The last two verses in the passage are a sort of first conclusion to the Gospel of St. John. Scripture scholars believe that he added chapter 21 later. However the last two verses sum up the evangelists’ whole purpose in writing this Gospel: to have later generations believe that Jesus was the Messiah, the Christ announced by the prophets in the Old Testament, the Son of God, so that by believing this saving truth, which is the core of Revelation, they might already begin to partake of eternal life.

Reflection: As I read the readings for Mass this weekend, they took on a special new meaning for me especially the Gospel. The first reading described by Scriptural scholars as a compendium of the Christian faith in action illustrates for me how essential it is for us to tell others about Jesus Christ. People must know our Christian narrative and we are the bearers of it in our time. We must try to lead others to Jesus. This relates to a rather interesting experience I recently had pertaining to the Gospel passage. When I was teaching a course in Psychology and Christianity in Italy a few years ago, I was visiting the Pantheon in Rome with some of my students. Inside the Pantheon is a beautiful painting of John 20:19-31. The painting extended nearly from ceiling to floor so it was quite life like. My students, some of whom were Christians, asked what was going on in the painting; what was the story being told by the painting. Even the students who were Christian didn’t know the narrative! We discussed Thomas doubting that the Lord had risen and how Jesus gave him an opportunity to believe. The fresco of Jesus and Thomas is significant for our celebration of Divine Mercy Sunday. Water and blood flowed from Jesus’ heart through the wound in His side. It is this wound that Thomas appears to be probing in that painting in the Pantheon. In a vision to St. Faustina, Jesus told her that the water and blood which poured forth from His heart is a “fountain of mercy”. That fountain of mercy is intended for all who avail themselves of it. Jesus revealed to St. Faustina that this fountain is especially encountered in confession and reconciliation where one can “immerse yourself entirely in My Mercy”. St. Faustina has told the world much about Jesus’ ardent desire for people to avail themselves in His Mercy. Her message is that Jesus is Love and Mercy personified. On this Divine Mercy Sunday, perhaps we may ask the Lord of Mercy for the grace to become true messengers of Mercy in an age so desperately in need of mercy and healing.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION FOR CHILDREN ATTENDING PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Raising children to know, live, and love their Catholic faith is a challenging task. Our parish communities assist parents in fulfilling this responsibility through both our parish schools and Sunday morning Religious Education Programs. We invite children who attend our neighborhood public schools to participate in our parish Religious Education Program for grades one through eight which is offered jointly with Our Lady of Lourdes Parish. Classes currently meet on Sunday mornings from 10:05 to 11:20 a.m., but this time may change for the 2023–2024 school year. Please be aware that if you wish your baptized child to receive First Communion in second grade, you must register him/her for the first grade religious education class. Also, if your child wants to play on an athletic team sponsored by St. Antoninus Parish or any other Catholic parish in Cincinnati, he/she must be enrolled in either the parish school or the parish Religious Education Program. Registration forms for the 2023–2024 school year will be available in June on www.lourdes.org under Faith/Religious Education. For questions, please call Ms. Kristina Krimm, Director of Religious Education, at 347-2646 or e-mail kkrimm@lourdes.org.

BULLETIN ADVERTISERS

Mark Mazza from Diocesan Publications is here to renew and find new advertisers for our weekly bulletin. Because of our advertisers the church receives the bulletin free each week. If you have a business or know a business owner who would be interested in information please call Mark at 513-392-6768 or email him at mmazza@diocesan.com. Thank you for your continuous support of our parish.
