From the Pastor's Desk

One of the great effects of our fallen nature is that we love to identify and often make known other people's faults and weakness. But at the same time we often overlook and/or minimize our own foibles. Sadly, this movement of the heart flows from our pride and egos. And why does the sins and/or shortcomings of others annoy us so greatly? Well, Jesus seems to indicate in our Gospel this weekend that is often a reminder that we possess a similar sin/defect/shortcoming in our own lives. Let us first of all remember that tearing others down is a dishonest way of raising ourselves up. As well, may we be given the grace of God to be brutally honest with ourselves about our own brokenness, sins, and shortcomings and so confess them to God, and then tenaciously work on them to not only root them out of our lives, but to replace them with the beautiful virtues that oppose them.

-Peace, Fr. Russell Kovash
