Dear Parishioners and Friends of Saint Teresa Church,

Thomas Griffin teaches religion at a Catholic high school, and is a husband and father of three children. He wrote this reflection two months ago, about the example given by a devout Christian named Aaron Judge.

Speaking publicly and comfortably about my faith can be challenging. If you are like me, there is always a fear of what others might think. How will I be perceived if I speak about Jesus at work, or even in a casual environment? But this summer, I have been encouraged to consider being more vocal about my faith, by the example of Aaron Judge.

NY Yankee Aaron Judge is arguably the best player in baseball. As he continues his phenomenal career, he has remained true to his roots and his values. And he continues to be vocal in public about his Christian faith.

There is nothing new about some professional athletes referencing Jesus, or thanking God after a victory. However, there is a level of comfort when Aaron Judge does that, which I find particularly interesting and inspiring.

The July All-Star weekend provided him with an opportunity not only to showcase his batting skills, but also to speak about his relationship with God. There were two ways Judge was public about his faith which show the genuineness of the man behind the pinstripes. Both served as reminders to me to implement Jesus into every aspect of my life.

In a media interview leading up to the All-Star Game, Judge was asked about his tendency to be outspoken about his faith. The interviewer asked him how he would respond to the idea that being famous and rich can satisfy anybody.

Judge answered this way: "Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ has given me my ability, and He has given me this platform. The fame, the chance to play professional baseball is great, but it's not as fulfilling as the relationship I have with Him." He also gave bold advice to people who are looking for meaning in life: "Build a relationship with Jesus and that will help to solve your problems."

When he delivered this response, Judge spoke to the reporters with a calm smile and a warm look in his eyes. He didn't appear to be seeking attention, nor was he attempting to make anyone comfortable with religion. Judge was simply himself. He was at work, and when asked about his values, he took the opportunity to discuss his personal relationship with Jesus as the most important aspect of his life.

The fact that the interviewer already knew about Judge's strong faith means that Aaron is becoming more well-known as a believer and not just as a baseball player. This has pushed me to ask myself: do other people know that I love Jesus above everything else? I realize that the only way they will know about my relationship with Jesus is if I cling to daily prayer more fervently, and speak about Jesus Christ more frequently.

Since reading his comments, I think that God is working through Judge's faith to push me to pray for the grace of courage and to speak more definitively about my faith.

And then in a social media post on the day before the All-Star Game, the Yankees posted a picture that clearly showed a Bible verse written on the baseball bat that Judge would use for that game. He chose these words from Saint Paul to the Corinthians "We live by faith, not by sight" (2 Corinthians 5:7).

Judge said that that verse from the Second Letter to the Corinthians is one of his favorite verses in all of Scripture: "I try to live my life by it, and always trust the Man above, and what He's got in store for us. We never know what is around the corner, but if we have faith in Him, He will lead us in the right direction."

Judge does not claim to be a saint, but his words about radical trust in the Father are grounded in centuries of saints and spiritual writers. Their chorus to abandon one's heart to the care of God is due to the fact that trust is difficult. Trust is what I need to grow as a disciple. Whether it is the health challenges of family members or being able to provide for my children—Judge's words remind me to live by heavenly principles and not the opinions of this world.

Aaron Judge's unapologetic approach to speaking about his Christian faith has also challenged me to think about how I speak about my own Catholic faith. Since I am on summer break as a teacher, it has pushed me to pray and to reflect on how I can be more vocal about my relationship with Christ to my students and colleagues.

While this is easier to do at a Catholic school than it is on the baseball field, it can become something that fades into the background too easily. Aaron Judge's words have forced me to learn from him and grow in my willingness to inject Jesus into all aspects of my job during this upcoming school year. Whether that is a more pronounced focus on prayer before class, or a greater willingness to speak to faculty members about my personal relationship with Jesus, I know I can infuse Christ more into my work.

Msgr. William Belford

Sunday , September 28 at 10:30 will be the first opportunity for our weekly LITURGY OF THE WORD FOR CHILDREN 4 TO 8. This takes place every Sunday at our 10:30 Mass. Right after we make the Sign of the Cross, the priest will invite all children who are between 4 and 8 to come to the front of the church and then go downstairs to a classroom with experienced teachers to learn about Scripture readings for that Sunday at their age level. We have done this for years, giving the children some activities, and they have a good time. They come back enthusiastically to their families with their drawings etc. as we start to take up the collection. And their parents have had less distraction while they listened to the Word of God.
