And he longed to eat his fill of the pods on which the swine fed, but nobody gave him any. Coming to his senses he thought, 'How many of my father's hired workers have more than enough food to eat, but here am I, dying from hunger. I shall get up and go to my father and I shall say to him, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and against you. I no longer deserve to be called your son; treat me as you would treat one of your hired workers."'" So he got up and went back to his father. While he was still a long way off, his father caught sight of him, and was filled with compassion. He ran to his son, embraced him and kissed him.

KNIGHTS PRAYER SERVICE WITH A SACRED HEART ICON

Join the Knights of Columbus Council 5800 for a prayer service devoted to the Sacred Heart of Jesus at St. Joseph Church (34 South Chestnut St. in New Paltz) on Monday, April 7, from 7:00-8:00 P.M. in the church. In these challenging times, we need to stay focused on Jesus Christ, whose Sacred Heart is devoted in love for us.

ALTAR RAIL

A church building or chapel is a sacred place consecrated and dedicated to the worship of God. Therefore, it is supposed to be adorned in such a way that we intellectually realize and emotionally feel that we are in the presence of God, hidden in the tabernacle. The most important space in the church or chapel is the sanctuary (from sanctuarium in Latin for “holy place”) because it is there where the tabernacle and altar are present since Christ is really and truly present in the tabernacle and becomes present on the altar at Holy Mass.

To distinguish the sanctuary from the rest of the church, called the nave (from navis in Latin for “ship”), the sanctuary is supposed to be elevated and there supposed to be a dividing structure. There are ancient precedents for this. In the Temple in Jerusalem there were distinct areas, namely, the outer courtyard for Gentiles, the inner place for the Israelites, and a still sanctuary for the priests. In the Temple’s sanctuary, there was also a Holy of Holies where only the High Priest was allowed to minister. The early Christians were persecuted and could not build churches which would have drawn the government’s attention, so worship was often offered secretly in private houses and, in fact, redesigned such private homes with distinct parts for liturgical rites.

In 313 AD the Edict of Milan granted freedom to worship to Christians. With that, Christians were given buildings such as basilica which were converted into churches and they were able to build churches outright. With cultural variations, these buildings had places marked off for an altar where only priests were allowed. In Armenia, curtains were and are still used to mark off the sanctuary. In Greek churches the demarcation of the sanctuary from the nave evolved into a solid, icon-clad screen, called the iconostasis which has three doorways and curtains that can be drawn. In the Latin speaking churches, starting in Rome, surrounding the altar with a screen or fence (cancellis) to separate the sanctuary from the main church nave became common. Around the 9th century, these cancellis evolved into the rood screens, for example, as at Santa Maria in Cosmedin in Rome. Rood Screens (rood is derived from the Saxon word rode meaning "cross.") allowed for more visibility than the Iconostasis, yet nevertheless highlighted the sacredness of the sanctuary where the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass takes place. After the Ecumenical Council of Trent in the mid-1500's, altar rails were preferred to the rood screens. The altar rail could be made of carved wood, metal, marble, or other precious material, about two feet six inches high, and on the upper part between six and nine inches wide.

As is well known, during the 1960's and 1970's the beauty and patrimony of many churches were under attack. Many still remember how old Saint Peter's (now Mount Carmel) suffered. Whether the changes were done through obedience to diocesan commissions or through being deceived by the unfounded idea that the Second Vatican Council had ordered changes, numerous pastors ripped out altars and altar rails while remodeling churches and chapels at heavy financial, aesthetical, liturgical, and theological cost. Many, if not most, of the renovations led to the eradication of the altar rail on the excuse that it “separated” the priest from the people. (Note that at this time, those who had adopted a Protestant understanding of the Sacred Liturgy as merely a celebratory communal meal, belittled the apostolic ad orientem posture of the priest at Holy Mass by terming it as “turning his back to the people” when in fact he was facing the cross and tabernacle, and praying to God with the people.) From a merely functional perspective, the altar rail can be said to separate the sanctuary from the body of the church but, even this has an instructive value because it designates the place of the tabernacle and altar as sacrosanct, as was the Holy of Holies in the Jerusalem Temple. In fact, Paragraph 295 of the General Instruction of the Roman Missal which is the current norm states explicitly that the sanctuary “should be appropriately marked off from the body of the church either by its being somewhat elevated or by a particular structure and ornamentation.” (The word “or,” in this case, is not exclusive of one or the other demands at least one.) Thus, the altar rail is a venerable part of the church. Moreover, the altar rail serves also as a protective barrier to prevent the malicious or insane from rushing towards the altar to profane the Blessed Sacrament. Best of all, with the eyes of faith, the altar rail can also be viewed as the table where the children of God gather to be fed with the Body of Christ. For this reason, the altar rail is also called the communion-rail since the faithful kneel at it when receiving Holy Communion. This is not without practical effect, since the rail enables those who are able to kneel side by side with other members of the congregation while waiting to receive Holy Communion. (To be continued...)
